WALSH AND 3 FOUND GUILTY

RAIL STRIKE TO END THIS WEEK, N. Y. FORECAST

Seniority Issue Will Not Stop It Now.

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The way to a settlement of the railroad shopmen's strike seemed clear today. A common ground has been reached on which both sides can quit "with honor" and all that remains to be done is for the 148 executives of the railroads to agree to it.

The strike would have been settled yesterday at the conference of eight officials, representing the Association of Executives, and five brotherhood leaders, acting as mediators for the strikers, but for the fact that the executives decided not to assume the responsibility of answering for the other 140.

An adjournment was taken subject to call and the heads of the railroads will gather in New York from all over the country at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning to act on the proposition that is expected to end the strike before the end of next week.

Leap Seniority Hurdle.

While neither side would discuss the nature of the peace proposals, it was learned that a way was found to get around the seniority stumbling block. The exact nature of this phase of the agreement is not revealed, but it appears to be based on the theory that when the strike is called off there will be such an accumulation of work that the men can be kept busy for a time, the men who have been on strike as well as the men who went into the shops when they quit. Consequently, there would be no necessity for raising the issue for a long time.

It is understood that the peace proposition decided on calls for two separate agreements between the roads and the shopmen, one of which is to be made public, if ratified, while the other is to be held confidential.

In the one that it is proposed shall be given to the public the roads are asked to take all of the strikers back under a so-called "gentlemen's agreement" to handle the seniority issue in a manner fair to the men.

Men Given Former Status.

In the one that it is proposed shall be held confidential it is understood that the men are to be assured all of the rights and privileges to which they would be entitled if taken back under a settlement plan calling for return with unimpaired seniority.

In this arrangement, which all of the conferees are believed to have agreed to support, outside observers see a cleverly worked out plan for pushing the so-called "die hard" element in the ranks of the executives and bringing about a "peace with honor."

Under this agreement neither side will score a clean-cut victory, because the men will return at the same wages against which they struck. They will do so, however, with the understanding that an immediate application shall be made for a rehearing of the wage question by the railroad labor board with a view to obtaining for the men something midway between the old scale and the new one.

Means Harding's Terms.

In other words, it was said today, the men will get what was offered them in the first peace terms proposed by President Harding, which they were willing to accept but which the roads rejected.

Railroad executives today were unable to conceal their irritation because of comments made by leaders of the mediating brotherhoods relative to the proposals they submitted to the executives. There was a feeling that the statements, which furnished the basis for speculation as to the concessions asked or offered, was nothing more than "propaganda," intended for the consumption of brotherhood members.

The talking, it was explained, had caused no little embarrassment to the railroad executives, who adjourned their conference with the brotherhood mediators yesterday afternoon, with the express stipulation that no statement, comment, or hint of what had taken place was to be made.

Might Delay Settlement.

The feeling was that the failure of the brotherhoods to live up to that agreement might accentuate the difficulty of an agreement between the two sides to the controversy.

The meeting of the executives to which the brotherhood proposals are to be referred will be at the Yale club.

Robert S. Binkerd, assistant to Chairman Cuyler of the executives, said it was doubtful whether the conference would end in time to communicate the result the same day to the brotherhoods. If the conference acts Wednesday afternoon it probably will make known its decision to the brotherhoods the next day.

STRIKE FIXERS SENTENCED TO YEAR IN CELL

Jurors Deliberate for Five Hours.

Thomas Walsh and Frank Hayes, business agents for the sheetmetal workers' union; Roy Shields, business agent for the painters' union, and Patrick J. Kane, business agent for the plumbers' union, were found guilty of conspiracy to extort money last night and their punishment fixed at one year in the county jail.

A jury in Judge Oscar M. Torrison's court, which for two weeks has listened to the evidence against the men, deliberated for nearly five hours before rendering its verdict, but none of the members would talk of their discussions. Prosecutor John E. Northup, who, with Prosecutor Warren Everett, handled the case for the state, expressed himself as satisfied with the verdict.

"Cleans Out Crooks."

"It is just another step in the cleaning up process which is going to destroy crookedness in labor unions," he said. "This cleaning up will save the unions from their own crooked officials and save the public from the grafting of corrupt business agents."

The conviction of the four men brings the total of labor officials, jury fixers, crooked jurors and labor terrorists who have been convicted since the campaign against them was begun to forty. Nearly a hundred more are under indictment and awaiting trial.

Walsh was the only one of the four defendants in court when the jury reported and the verdicts were read by the clerk. For five hours he had stood around in the corridors on the ninth floor of the County building waiting to hear the outcome of the case, but when the verdict was read he showed no emotion.

Walsh Smiles On.

When asked if he had anything to say he at first shook his head and then said, "Just say that I took it smiling," and still smiling the man who will soon have to stand trial for a second time on a charge of murder walked out of the courtroom.

None of the four attorneys who had defended the labor officials was in court when the verdict was read and after the reading Mr. Northup informed the court that he had been requested to inform him that the defense desired to make a motion for a new trial in the event of a guilty verdict. Judge Torrison set the motion for hearing on September 30.

The charges against the men were the outgrowth of labor trouble experienced by contractors and architects in the construction of the Portage and Stratford theaters and the Versailles hotel. The state's chief witnesses were Walter W. Alschlager, architect; A. E. Whitebeck, contractor; William G. Krieg, superintendent of construction; Harold A. Drumm, contractor, and Edward Browarski, contractor.

Tell of Payments.

One after another these men took the stand and told how strikes had been called on buildings they were constructing, how they had conferred with one or more of the defendants, and how they had made payments ranging in amount from $500 to $1,500 to the labor officials to settle the difficulties.

All the defendants but Kaufe denied that they had ever received any money from any of the contractors. Krieg had testified that he gave Kane $500 to settle a strike, and it was this payment that the business agent admitted receiving, but he said that it had nothing to do with any labor difficulties—that Krieg had simply given it to him as a present.

The case has been on trial before Judge Torrison for six weeks, the first four being used in selecting a jury. Closing arguments in the matter were completed Friday night and Judge Torrison announced that he would instruct the jury at 9:30 yesterday morning, but disagreement of counsel upon the different instructions delayed the reading until 2 o'clock.

After the jury was instructed four bailiffs instead of the customary two were sworn in to take charge of it and later, after there had been rumors that a demonstration might be staged, the judge sent for four deputy sheriffs and they, too, were sworn in.

Class of 4,650 Takes Oath of Ku Klux Klan

Twenty-five thousand knights of the Ku Klux Klan, banked tier on tier in a huge field southwest of Chicago, with the red flare from a great, blazing cross to light their mystic rites, last night initiated the nation's biggest class of new Klansmen—4,650 candidates.

With 25,000 enthusiastic voices chanting the sonorous, surging roll of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," the candidates, still garbed in their workday clothes, faced the cross and its circle of white-clad initiators and pledged their allegiance to the revival of the mysterious Ku Klux Klan—first born shortly after the civil war and rejuvenated a few years ago.

Had it not been for the vacation season there would have been 50,000 Klansmen present for the ceremony, officials declared.

Reporter Is "Let In."

For the first time since the Klan entered Chicago a reporter was allowed to be present and witness the entire ritual.

Early yesterday afternoon automobiles began to stream from all parts of Chicago toward the big field at 91st street and Harlem avenue, out near Oaklawn. The early start was necessary to care for the heavy traffic.

They came by sections, representing the eighteen Klans in Chicago and the twelve outside in Cook county. As fast as they arrived the cars were placed in a big circle, a quarter of a mile in diameter. In the center of the circle was the cross, twenty feet high and wrapped in cotton from the southern fields.

Don Robes at Sundown.

Long before night the circle of cars was completed and still the automobiles kept streaming across the prairies, to line up on all roads leading to the field for a mile in either direction. Early in the evening candidates and initiates mingled in the vast throng. A light lunch was served from a big refreshment booth.

At sundown, by a signal from a leader, the Klansmen already initiated donned their white robes—long, sheetlike garments with a red cross emblazoned on the left breast, with a peak of white for head covering. Only the eyes showed, through slits in the cloth. The headlights of the automobiles were turned on, centering a flood of light on the white cross.

From sundown until midnight the candidates and Klansmen talked and wandered about the circled area. When midnight came, from a far opening at the south end walked a silent procession of klansmen, headed by the imperial representative from Atlanta, Ga., and the grand dragon of Illinois. Slowly the workers who were to take part in the ceremony marched to the cross, then grouped themselves in a solid circle about it.

Then Come Initiates.

Intervened a circle of emptiness. Then came another ring of solid white, then—between the blazing headlights and the Klansmen—a ring of dark figures. These were the civilian clad candidates for membership.

The candidates were lined up in squads and marched around the circle of Klansmen. Searching eyes inspected them, to make certain at the last minute that none should enter "not fit" for the ritual of the Klan. When the circular march was completed a torch was applied to the cotton covering of the cross, and as it burned the grand representative intoned the oath binding the new members to the Klan. The candidates, with hands above their heads, repeated the oath word for word. Then the Klansmen silently left for home.

MEASURE GOES TO CONFERENCE FOR MORE FIGHT

Hope for Enactment Before Election.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—After four months of debate the senate late today passed the McCumber tariff bill designed to yield an annual revenue of $400,000,000. This is $50,000,000 greater than customs duties ever produced.

The vote on the passage of the bill was 48 to 25. Senator Borah [Idaho] was the only Republican voting in the negative, although it was announced that Senators La Follette [Wis.] and Norris [Neb.], who are out of the city, would have voted similarly if they had been present.

Among Republicans who voted for the bill with some reluctance Senators Lenroot [Wis.] and Jones [Wash.] served notice that they might vote against the conference report unless many reductions in duties are made.

Three Democrats, Senators Ransdell and Broussard [La.] and Kendrick [Wyo.], voted for the bill.

La Follette Off Conferee List.

Senators McCumber [N. D.], Smoot [Utah], and McLean [Conn.], Republicans, and Simmons [N. C.], and Jones [N. M.], Democrats, were appointed as conferees for the senate in adjusting the differences between the senate bill and the Fordney bill as passed by the house.

In selecting the conferees the two ranking Republicans on the finance committee, Senators McCumber and Smoot, were selected and Senator McLean, who is fifth in rank, chosen instead of Senator La Follette, who ranks third. Senator Dillingham [Vt.], fourth in rank, did not desire to serve.

The bill will be sent to conference by the house probably on Monday. A special rule will be used to expedite action if objections to unanimous consent are made. The course of procedure was decided upon at a conference of Republican members of the house ways and means committee today.

Fight on Valuation Plan.

Representative Fordney [Mich.], chairman of the ways and means committee, who returned to Washington during the day, declared he had not changed his determination to continue his fight for the adoption of the American valuation plan as provided in the house bill. He said he would carry the issue to the house if the conferees refused to accept American valuation, and he believes the house will uphold his position.

He indicated that the will of the house will govern his course, and if a majority of the house favors the acceptance of the foreign valuation basis, as provided in the senate bill, he will drop his battle. It is considered likely that the valuation issue will be settled before the conferees attempt to decide on rates of duty.

Conferees to Take a Month.

Mr. Fordney predicted that the conferees would complete their work in a month and that the bill would be on the statute books before the election. There are many who doubt this and believe final enactment will be delayed until November or December.

Debate on the bill was begun in the senate on April 20 and has continued with few interruptions throughout the four months since that date. Hearings were commenced by the house ways and means committee on Jan. 6, 1921, and the bill was passed by the house in July, 1921. It was reported to the senate from the finance committee on April 11.

The duties in the senate bill are higher in many instances than in the house bill. Particularly is this true in the case of duties on farm products, which were boosted by the senate considerably above the Payne-Aldrich law level, which was the standard followed by the house committee.

General Tendency Higher.

While the senate committee increased duties on many manufactured articles, the senate itself reduced a good many of them. As a general proposition, the manufacturing industries are not so well pleased with the bill as are the agricultural interests. In some cases, notably in dyes, the senate rates are far in excess of the house rates. The general average of protection accorded is greater than in the Payne-Aldrich law.

The senate transferred to the free

GIRL OF 6 WEEKS SUES TAXI FOR PRE-BIRTH HURT

Jersey City, N. J., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—A six weeks old child, through her father, today brought suit against a taxicab company for injuries alleged to have been received before she was born.

Through her father, Samuel Gargiulo, the infant alleges that as a result of an automobile accident to her mother, riding in a taxicab of the Hudson Taxicab company of Jersey City, she was black and blue from bruises at the time of her birth and had a paralyzed right arm. She seeks $25,000 damages. Her father asks $15,000 damages for future loss of the child's services and for medical expenses incurred, he says, as a result of the accident.

The mother, it was said, was only slightly injured when the taxicab in which she was riding collided with another car.

CALL OFF STRIKE OF SANTA FE BIG 4 BROTHERHOODS

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The strike of the Big Four brotherhoods on the coast lines of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé railway system has been called off and freight and passenger service will be resumed immediately it was announced today by I. L. Hibbard, general manager of the Santa Fé.

The embargo on freight was lifted with the announcement, the Santa Fé general manager said, but the return of the Big Four brotherhoods men will effect no change in the situation of the striking shop craftsmen, he declared. No terms have been made with the shopmen, the conferences dealing solely with the operating trainmen.

NORMA RUCKER RETURNED HOME; LONGED FOR JOB

Norma Rucker, 13 year old daughter of Mrs. Grace Rucker, 33 South Menard avenue, who had been missing since Thursday night, was returned to her home last night by Mrs. Henry H. Dilg of Morton Grove.

"She came to my house early Friday morning and asked for work," said Mrs. Dilg. "I took her in—knowing something was wrong. Then I read the newspapers and found who she was."

Norma sobbed a bit when she saw her mother.

"I wanted to go to work," she said. "I'm awfully sorry, mother."

Her mother kissed her.

SHOT TO DEATH SAVING HUSBAND

Wife Slain Trying to Stop Shooting Fray.

One minute last night Mrs. Andrew Huska was humming happily as she busied herself about her evening duties in her little home at 3222 South Hoyne avenue.

Sixty seconds later her body lay in an alley in the rear of her home, three bullet holes bearing mute testimony to a love for her husband which caused her to die to save him from an assassin.

Andrew Huska and Thomas Chromitsky are neighbors. The Chromitsky home is one door south of that of the Huska family.

Were Good Friends.

Both men are middle aged. They have been good friends. Last week came a rift in their neighborly sky. A little thing from which grew a tragedy—an argument over some "rights" in the back yard. It grew and became ugly.

Over the fence last night Andrew and Thomas argued bitterly for their respective "rights." Hotter grew the verbal battle until both men were shouting.

Dared to Fight.

"Come out in the alley and we'll settle this thing once and for all," challenged Thomas. And Husak, the hot blood racing within him, accepted the dare.

They clashed. Andrew proved the stronger and was bearing Chromitsky to the ground. The latter, frantic in his rage, pulled a gun from his pocket and shot. The bullet struck Andrew in the right arm.

Mrs. Huska heard the shot in her kitchen. She rushed into the alley as the murderer raised the gun again. Her husband lay on the ground.

"Don't shoot my husband!" she screamed as she grabbed the man's arm.

And So She Died.

He whirled and pointed the revolver at her body. He pulled the trigger three times. The faithful wife of Andrew Huska died.

Chromitsky, the slayer, ran into his house and barred the doors. From the windows he jeered police from Brighton Park station, headed by Captain Michael Lee.

"I will kill myself, too, if you try to take me," he yelled. But they broke in and took him to a cell.

Another shooting last night occurred at 1647 West Grand avenue. John Grange, a roomer, so often came home of a Saturday night "full of moonshine" that his landlady, Mrs. Rose Delante, became incensed. She upbraided John and John up and hit her. Mrs. Delante went and got her gun.

"I just let him have it," she said—three bullets took effect. He's in the county hospital and will recover.

list nearly a score of items from the dutiable list reported by the committee, and made dutiable about half a dozen items which were free in the McCumber bill.

Those transferred from the dutiable list to the free list on the floor of the senate included white arsenic, cyanide, brick, cement, black or silver foxes, cocoanuts, chemical wood pulp, hides, leather, boots and shoes, cheaper grades of harness and saddles, ivory tusks, bread, logs, and telegraph poles.

Articles which were free as the bill came from the finance committee and were made dutiable by the senate included manganese, cream separators, casein, dynamite and other high explosives, apricots, and ammonium nitrate.

Few Changes in Final Hours.

No important changes were made in the bill by the senate during the final hours of the debate. There were roll calls on a number of amendments of the committee of the whole on which reservations had been made for separate action in the senate. The flexible tariff provisions, which authorize the President to increase or decrease duties by not more than 50 per cent after a recommendation has been made by the tariff commission, were approved again, by a vote of 45 to 26. Senator Borah was one of those who opposed these provisions, questioning their constitutionality.

Senator Borah, in discussing the bill, said he felt obliged to vote against it as an expression of a desire that the conferees should endeavor to improve it. He said it seemed to him impossible to revise the tariff properly with conditions as chaotic as at present.

The flexible tariff provisions were amended in one particular on the motion of Senator Smoot. It was provided that any reductions in duties on dyes made by the President should be effective after fifteen days, instead of sixty days, as provided on other commodities.

Some Modifications.

Senator Moses [N. H.] failed in an attempt to cause the senate to strike out the amendment which prohibits the importation of goods bearing a trade mark registered by a person living in the United States without the consent of the owner of the trade mark. The provision applies to dyes, among other articles. He said it would be in violation of treaties with other nations.

The minimum duty on artificial silk yarns was increased from 35 to 45 per cent and the rate on knit goods and other manufactured articles of artificial silk was increased from 45 cents per pound plus 50 per cent to 45 cents plus 60 per cent. The duty on men's straw hats was increased from 50 to 60 per cent. The provision permitting free entry of Mexican tomatoes during the winter months was stricken out, and later an amendment lowering the duty on tomatoes from 1 cent to ½ cent per pound was approved.

Partisan Broadsides Follow.

Statements were issued following the passage of the bill by Senator McCumber on behalf of the Republicans and by Senators Simmons and Walsh [Mass.] on behalf of the minority members of the finance committee.

Senator McCumber declared that the bill would bring prosperity, while the Democratic spokesmen decribed the measure as "one of the most abominable legislative acts of an American congress."

Senator McCumber said that the main objective in the framing of this bill has been the stabilization of American labor.

"The senate," he said, "has given the President the power to increase or decrease rates of duty not in excess of 50 per centum of the rates specified in the act, in order that rates specified in this bill which have been fixed to meet present conditions may be adjusted to meet any subsequent change in these conditions."

Billion Increase of H. C. L.

A statement issued jointly by Senators Simmons and Walsh declared that the duties levied on fresh meats, cereals, potatoes and beans if reflected in increased prices will amount to an increase of $1,250,000,000 in the cost of living. They estimate that the duties on wool and woolen goods, including pyramided profits, will cost the consumer $195,447,063, while the duties on cotton goods will cost $108,074,470 and the increased duty on sugar will cost the consumer $157,500,000.

"The rates are excessive," says the Simmons-Walsh statement, "and the indiscriminate manner in which subsidies and bounties have been distributed to organized groups and classes at the expense of the many is scandalous."

LOVE PICKS LOCK OF LAW; MOVIE WIDOW WEDS

Oyster Bay, Long Island, N. Y., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Their romance unfettered at last, after months of litigation, Mrs. Florence E. Rock, beautiful and wealthy widow of William T. Rock, president of the Vitagraph company, and John H. Berk, insurance broker of New York, were married tonight at the home of the bride.

Mrs. Rock recently was made defendent in a suit for $100,000, charging alienation of affections, brought by the insurance man's former wife, Mrs. Kate Berk. In her defense Mrs. Rock stated there never was any love between Berk and Mrs. Berk and charged that the couple never had been legally married.

Mrs. Berk admitted that she lost all love for her husband in 1907 when he struck her with a cane upon finding her after a night's absence at a neighbor's home. She also admitted that a man ran out of the back door as Berk entered.

G. O. P. PREPARES TO OBEY HARDING IN STRIKE CRISES

Gompers Labels Message "Unfortunate."

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Republican leaders in congress are proceeding with plans to carry out the President's recommendations with respect to relief in the situation arising from the coal strike and to afford federal protection to aliens.

There are prospects of indefinite delay on the creation of a government coal purchasing corporation, and the measure to give the government jurisdiction over aliens within the states.

The President will have little difficulty in getting legislation for a coal commission of investigation. He conferred today with Senator Borah, who has introduced such a bill. House leaders are preparing to proceed with the bill introduced weeks ago by Representative Bland [Ind.] to create a coal commission.

Opposed to Coal Agency.

Representative Mondell [Wyo.] the house majority leader, was declared today to be opposed to the President's proposed coal purchasing corporation.

Senator Kellogg [Minn.] is endeavoring to bring about an early meeting of the foreign relations committee to consider his bill to give federal jurisdiction over aliens. In some respects the Dyer anti-lynching bill passed by the house would afford relief asked by the President with respect to aliens, but it does not cover the ground contemplated in the President's request.

The President's message was "unfortunate," and it interfered seriously with negotiations in progress to end the railroad strike, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared today.

"It was unfortunate that the President should have gone before congress yesterday with the coal strike well on its way to complete settlement and with satisfactory progress being made towards settlement of the rail strike," Mr. Gompers said.

Saw No Remedy in Speech.

"I am informed from New York that the executives assumed a different mood and attitude after the conference adjourned for lunch and they learned the nature of the President's message.

"The President suggested nothing that could alleviate the present situation and his address might well have been deferred until the negotiations had ended one way or another, or until an opportunity was had for the exercise of cool judgment."

Mr. Gompers strongly condemned that portion of the President's address recommending the ultimate strengthening of the Cummins-Esch law to make the decisions of the railroad labor board enforceable.

"The President's position is nothing new for him," Mr. Gompers continued. "As a member of the senate, he was paired in favor of a provision of the transportation act, which contained a proposal to outlaw strikes and compel men to work against their will.

Harks to First Message.

"In his first regular message to congress in December, 1921, he recommended measures of that kind that would invoke the power of the government to compel workers to obey the decisions of a body or court affecting wages and conditions.

"He says now that the decisions of the railroad labor board must be made enforceable. No other construction can be placed upon that statement but that if the railroad labor board or any other similar body renders a decision further reducing wages or imposing repugnant conditions upon the workers, they will have to go to work or go to jail."

Mr. Gompers added that if the President's suggestion for a "fact-finding" commission could be carried into effect properly it would be "of incalculable benefit to the coal mining industry and to the country."

Admits Herrin Was "Nasty."

"Mr. Harding's desire for legislation to enable the federal government to protect aliens in the various states may be 'another way of making an effort to override the constitution and the rights of the states,'" Mr. Gompers said.

The Herrin killings, Gompers declared, were "a nasty piece of business which no one can justify or regard without indignation," but he added, "it has been officially ascertained that company men first killed innocent strikers."

RAIL FIGURES DECEIVE PUBLIC, UNION ALLEGES

Gain Billion by Rate; Wage Move, Charge.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

By raising and lowering wages and by increasing and decreasing freight and passenger rates, the railroads of the nation have skimmed off more than $1,000,000,000 in cream, according to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

The process by which this separation of the cream from the skimmed milk was effected is told in a pamphlet issued yesterday by the brotherhood. It is entitled, "Facts and Figures," and is marked No. 1, which probably indicates that the brotherhood's research department is just starting a new line of inquiry.

Says Public Is Deceived.

The pamphlet claims that by "educating the public" the railroad corporations have hoodwinked and deceived the entire nation into believing that the increase in wages, through decisions of the United States railroad labor board, are responsible for the high freight rates.

The pamphlet starts with the passage by congress in February, 1920, of the transportation act—the Cummins-Esch law. Since that time to July 1 last the firemen and engineers assert that wages were increased $618,000,000 and freight rates went up $1,550,000,000.

Since these advances in wages and railroad charges there has been a decrease in wages of $558,000,000 and in freight rates of only $400,000,000. The result has been a "net gain or profit to the railroads of approximately $1,090,000,000."

"Freight and passenger rates first were increased $1,550,000,000 and then decreased $400,000,000," reads the pamphlet. "The difference leaves a net increase in favor of the railroads of $1,150,000,000.

"Wages of employés were increased $618,000,000 and then decreased more than $558,000,000. The difference is a net increase of less than $60,000,000.

"Revenues Up to $1,090,000,000."

"Substracting this small sum of $60,000,000 of net wage increases from the enormous total of $1,150,000,000 representing net rate increases, leaves the railroads of the country more than $1,090,000,000 in increased revenues, based on traffic conditions of 1920.

"And this result is arrived at by taking estimates made by railway representatives themselves and the United States railroad labor board. Those of the former are more than likely exaggerated as to the amount of the wage increases and rates decreases, and minimized as to the amounts of wage decreases and rate increases.

"Under the provisions and requirements of the Cummins-Esch law, and under the guise of charging the American people a certain wage increase, railroad employés as a class now find themselves almost where they were before enactment of the Cummins-Esch law, as far as their wages are concerned, while the railroad corporations are placed in a position to benefit annually to the amount of $1,090,000,000 under traffic conditions similar to 1920."

Board's Estimates Used.

The pamphlet asserts that the wage increases of about 22 per cent, totaling $618,000,000, excludes boosts given general and divisional officers and that the amount involved is the estimate made by the board itself.

The rate increases totaling $1,550,000,000 represent freight rate boosts of $1,265,000,000 and passenger fare boosts of $285,000,000. The leaflet goes on with serious charges as follows:

"This total increase by the interstate commerce commission, based upon 1920 traffic conditions, represents an amount of net operating income, under traffic conditions at the time of the award, that is $200,000,000 greater than the very high standard return paid the railroads as rental by the government during the thirty-two months of federal control and guarantee.

Quotes Cummins' Indictment.

"This standard return, it will be remembered, was declared by Senator Cummins, one of the authors of the transportation act, to be so high that 'it shocked the moral sense of mankind.'"

In addition to this increase the engineers and firemen assert that the new rules and charges, following the perishable freight investigation, have given the roads more competition, and the consolidated classification has further increased the income of the carriers. No estimate of these added benefits is given.

The pamphlet gives the decisions under which it claims wages were decreased $558,000,000, and adds that the $400,000,000 freight rate cut is the estimate of the Railway Age.

"Farmers Learning Truth."

The leaflet claims that "the farmers, who have been the greatest sufferers, are now learning the truth" about the "exploiting of a wage increase."

And still another broadside reads: "The consumers in every walk of life are learning that no greater subsidy was ever granted to corporate wealth than that given to the railroads under the Cummins-Esch law and by the bureaucratic agencies created by that law."

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 19.—The joint conference of anthracite operators and union officials ended today's session without reaching an agreement. The next session will be held on Monday at 4 o'clock.

3 MILLION TONS OF INDIANA COAL SIGN PEACE PACT

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 19.—[United Press.]—President Hessler of district 11, United Mine Workers, today announced that Indiana operators, representing 3,000,000 tons of coal production annually have signed the Cleveland agreement, in advance of the meeting between scale committees of the operators and miners here Monday. He declined to give the names of operators who have signed pending the conference Monday.

Hessler said he had been officially notified that all Ohio operators, including the Southern association, and excepting the Pennsylvania Coal company, operating two mines, and the Pittsburgh and Great Lakes company, had signed.

Twenty-two million tons have been signed up in West Virginia and a third of the operators in the Pittsburgh district, including all independent operators of central Pennsylvania, Hessler said.

OHIO REQUESTED TO INSURE FAIR PRICE FOR COAL

Hoover Wires Governor to Prevent Profiteering.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—Immediate action for the proper protection of the public in the price of coal produced in Ohio was asked of Gov. Davis today by Secretary Hoover. In a telegram to the Ohio governor, the commerce secretary declared that coal operators in that state would welcome some sort of voluntary arrangement for establishing fair prices in Ohio.

"I am informed," Mr. Hoover said, "that coal mines now opening in Ohio under the Cleveland agreement are demanding from $7 to $10 a ton for coal. In the meantime the public utilities of Ohio are asking us for priority orders against southern fields where the price is $3.50.

All Must Get Justice.

"You will recognize that, in this situation, if we are to give priorities as requested, it would not be just either to the operators or to persons in great need of coal in other states in view of the additional supplies in Ohio."

Mr. Hoover recalled that under the Garfield scale the average price for run of mine coal in the Pittsburgh district was about $2.50 a ton, but added that the recent wage scale represents a large increase over the basis of pay at the time the Garfield scale was fixed. However, he added, in Kentucky, where $4.50 a ton has been allowed as a maximum fair price, production costs are higher than in Ohio.

West Virginia was brought into line with Kentucky prices today by Federal Distributor Spencer, who allowed coal operators in that state a maximum of $4.50 a ton at the mine. The previous fair price prevailing in that state was about $3.50, but Gov. Morgan of West Virginia suggested the increase to meet the new wage scale agreements and accelerate production.

Fight on Profiteers.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 19.—John W. McCardle, head of the state coal emergency committee, sent a telegram today to Clyde B. Aitchison, member of the interstate commerce commission, urging action against coal profiteers. McCardle declared that profiteering in fuel is being carried on in Indiana.

"Profiteering in coal prices going on," said the message. "I suggest that maximum price in Indiana be $3.50 at the mine. Establish price in other states to meet conditions. Enforce this order by refusing cars. Plenty of producers willing to accept established price. Consumers in this state alarmed on account of profiteering. Drastic measures should be adopted."

Names Chicago Concern.

McCardle said that his attention had been called to an alleged offer by the Wolverine company of Chicago, Ill., to a Newcastle, Ind., company. The Wolverine company, he said, offered as many as fifteen cars of coal at a price of $8 a ton, f. o. b. the mine. Mines of the company, he said, are at Clinton, Ind. Coal which was produced by the state at Staunton, Ind., for emergency purposes was sold for $4 a ton at the mine.

LITTLE WARMTH IN WEEKLY COAL OUTPUT REPORT

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The United States geological survey reported today that it was too early to learn the immediate effect upon coal production of the agreement signed at Cleveland between mine workers and bituminous operators.

Production during the week Aug. 14-19 from mines that were already working, the survey reports, will be about 4,800,000 tons.

"It is unlikely," the report says, that the union mines now reopening in Ohio and elsewhere will raise the output for the week much above the 4,574,000 tons produced last week. For while mines long closed by the strike are reopening, there has been a recurrence of acute railroad disability in certain of the nonunion and open shop fields.

"Loadings on Monday, Aug. 14, according to the railroads, were 16,728 cars, a decrease of 3 per cent as compared with the week preceding. Thereafter they declined steadily to 12,530 cars on Wednesday. The loadings on Thursday, 13,463 cars, gave the first indication of shipments from mines reopened under the Cleveland agreement.

Final returns show production of all coal in the nineteenth week of the strike as 4,605,000 tons, including 29,000 tons of anthracite. In the corresponding week of 1921 the output of bituminous was 7,770,000 tons and of anthracite 1,770,000 tons, a total for all coal raised of 9,540,000 tons. The year before that the total was 12,380,000 tons. Considering anthracite and bituminous coal as a common source of supply, the present weekly output is five or six million tons below normal.

COAL PEACE IN ILLINOIS RESTS IN HANDS OF SIX

Committee Chosen to Recommend Terms.

After wrestling with the points in dispute most of the afternoon and again last night without arriving at an agreement, the committee of six, into whose hands the operators and miners have placed the job of settling Illinois' coal strike, adjourned to meet again at 11 o'clock this morning.

Both sides announced the conferees will meet again all day today and again tonight and all day every day this week, if necessary, to come to an understanding. Both miners and operators are anxious to effect a settlement and get back to their homes as quickly as possible. They say they intend to drag peace out of the present conference if there is any possible plan upon which they can agree without too great a sacrifice to the miners, the operators and the public.

Peace in Air.

Although they appeared to be as far apart as ever when the meeting adjourned last night, indications were that a middle ground may be reached today or tomorrow. The fact that no adjournment was taken yesterday after both scale committees had come to a deadlock and that the sub-scale committee of six was chosen to carry on the negotiations was interpreted as meaning that peace is in the air.

Frank Farrington, president of the miners, predicted the conferences may last a week before all points are settled.

As soon as the conferees went into session at the Auditorium hotel the committee on rules turned the meeting over to the business of the two scale committees representing about 100 operators and some forty miners.

President Farrington then announced that the miners were not authorized to offer any other form of settlement than that provided in the Cleveland agreement. This is that the miners should go to work on the old wage scale and working conditions until April 1 next, both sides in the meantime to appoint delegates to attend a conference representing the entire bituminous industry at Cleveland on Oct. 2. Under this plan this conference is to pick a fact finding committee and a committee to determine on what basis future negotiations shall be conducted in the industry to prevent further strikes and lockouts. Both committees, the plan provides, are to report their findings to the general conference at Cleveland next January.

Glad to Meet Him.

The operators listened attentively and replied that they were glad to meet Mr. Farrington in conference for the first time during the strike of nearly five months' duration. They thought it only fair, they said, that they should present their side, which is the plan of arbitration suggested by President Harding. This plan provides for the return of the men to work under the old wage and working conditions until April 1, and the adjustment of a two years' contract to run from that date by a board of arbitration selected by the President. The operators suggested that the only stipulation they would make in regard to this plan would be that only the public, the third party to the controversy, should be represented on the arbitration commission; that no miners or operators should be entitled to membership.

A. J. Moorshead of the Madison Coal corporations warmed the meeting up with an impassioned appeal to the miners on the fairness of settling labor disputes by arbitration. He was followed by two of the miners' delegates who also were quite as heated in their stand against acceptance of any form of arbitration.

At this point the operators suggested that, although it seemed the contending parties were widely separated, they had hopes that a middle ground could be found and pointed out that this probably could be found more quickly by a smaller committee than by leaving it to the entire conference, where so many voices would have to be heard. The miners agreed.

The sub-scale committee was then selected, consisting of the presidents of the three operators' organizations; Rice Miller, president of the Illinois Coal Operators' association; H. C. Adams, president of the Central Illinois Operators' association, and W. A. Kavanaugh, president of the operators' association for the fifth and ninth districts—the Belleville districts. The miners selected the three officers of their organization as their representatives—President Harrington, Vice President Harry Fishwick, and Secretary Walter Nesbit.

Will Hold to Job.

The committee went into executive session at the Congress hotel in the afternoon and it was announced that their sessions would be continued until something definite had been arrived at which could be submitted to the general conference for ratification. President Farrington has said that until every effort to effect a settlement here has failed no separate agreements will be signed by the miners with any of the Illinois operators as permitted under the terms of the Cleveland agreement.

It is possible that a state convention of the miners might be called following the Chicago conference either to ratify what has been accomplished here or to authorize the union scale committee to conduct negotiations on a different basis.

A national referendum among the miners on the acceptance or rejection of the Cleveland agreement is expected to be ordered by John L. Lewis, international president, within the next few days. This referendum will not be taken, however, according to President Farrington, until after the men return to work. He has predicted that the Illinois miners will reject the plan but if a majority of the miners in other states favor it it will still be binding on Illinois.

Any agreement reached at Chicago will have to be ratified ultimately by the 90,000 miners in the state.

DESPONDENT, SLASHES THROAT.

DRYS APPALLED; THEN FIND MAYOR USED BEER COUP

Got Rid of Agent; Lager Is Sold.

Johnstown, Pa., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Large steins of foaming 6 and 8 per cent beer were served at 10 cents each over the bars in saloons in some of the chief streets of Johnstown today. Patrons lined up in rows three or four deep.

The old time courtesy of the barroom prevailed, the short patrons being allowed first place at the bar, while the middle sized and taller ones rose, tier on tier, ferrying the powerful brew over the shoulders and heads of those in the front ranks.

The Old Free Lunch.

The ranks were broken from time to time as the free lunch counter was stocked up again with sausage, potato salad, cream cheese with chives, pickles, pretzels, rye bread and butter and slices of ham. Customers stood in line impatiently.

One saloon man set forth a fine Virginia ham studded with cloves, but carefully lost the knife and kept it lost, so that the ham made a show of hospitality all day long, while cheaper foods did the heavy work.

Johnstown was the wettest point between Montreal and Havana as the result of the order of Mayor Joseph Cauffiel, who, strangely enough, is a dryest of the dry. Once or twice he has nearly succeeded in cleaning up Johnstown, which is considerable of a job, on account of the size and diversity of the foreign population. But in his cleanup campaigns he has had little assistance, he says, from federal or state officials.

Bugs in His Water.

Yesterday he turned the faucet of his water hydrant at home to get a cold drink and found a collection of bugs and worms in the water. Then he sent for the brewers and saloonkeepers.

They expected a bawling out. Instead he gave the order for pure beer. But there was a joker in it. The mayor cautiously added that nobody would be molested who "complies with law." The saloon men took for granted that the mayor meant the city laws regarding closing and believed they could sell beer as strong as they could get it.

"I've been trying to clean out the bootleggers here for months," the mayor said. "Last week I called upon law abiding citizens to help me in the fight. Only two responded. One was too young to serve as a special policeman. The other was sworn in, but failed to report for duty the next day.

Bootleggers Sell Poison.

"The bootleggers are selling poison. It is full of wood alcohol and ether.

"If people want to drink Johnstown water they are taking a chance of getting typhoid. The water is full of bugs.

"Owing to the dangerous condition of the water supply in Johnstown every person who complies with the law can sell beer—not near beer, but real beer and ale.

"I don't see how the federal government can interfere with breweries who are trying to give the public real beer when our water supply is in such a condition.

Breakfast on Bar.

But the thirsty at Johnstown weren't so optimistic as the saloon men. They feared if the town was open it wouldn't remain open for more than a day, and they decided to make the most of it. They arrived at the barrooms before breakfast and after breakfasting on beer decided it should be a holiday, anyway, and stayed.

And they weren't far wrong in their assumption, for the federal prohibition authorities acted with speed when they heard of the proclamation.

Their first act was to relieve the entire Johnstown prohibition force of its duties, and to remove from office O. R. Stiffler, chief prohibition officer of the district, by State Director John T. Davis.

The canny mayor probably got a laugh out of this, for, it is said, he has been trying to have Stiffler removed for many weeks.

Anyway, he apparently was satisfied with results, for he ordered the sale of beer stopped when E. A. Spragg, a prohibition agent of Philadelphia, took charge.

"Efforts to close saloons through police power," the mayor said tonight, "were not very successful, so I decided something drastic was necessary. Yes, I got action."

RIDICULE DROVE HIM TO CRACKING SAFES, YEGG SAYS

Muskegon, Mich., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—John Steiner, 27, of Dugger, Ind., who confessed to the police that he pulled twenty-seven safe cracking jobs in the last year, says ridicule drove him to advance in crime.

"I robbed a gasoline station, stealing some oil, and the newspapers laughed at me because I missed several thousand dollars in the safe. Then I started safe cracking," said Steiner. In twenty-four cases Standard Oil company offices were robbed, most of the jobs being in Indiana and Illinois, Steiner says the jobs yielded about $7,000.

He was captured last night as he prepared for work.

Jobs admitted by Steiner are: La Salle, Ill.; Kankakee, Ill., two jobs; Goshen, Ind., three jobs; Crawfordsville, Ind., two jobs; Vincennes, Ind., two jobs; Niles, Mich., two jobs; Columbus, Ind.; Sullivan, Ind., two jobs; Indianapolis, Wabash, South Bend, and Michigan City, Ind.; Robinson, Ill., and Owosso, Mich.

Thomas started his death plunge backwards from his rigger's chair when he was overcome by heat. As his feet came through the rigging his toes became entangled in a rope. He remained face down, unconscious, eighty feet above the street, for twenty-five minutes when he was rescued with fire department extension ladders.

Mrs. Giberson Denies She Murdered Her Husband

Toms River, N. J., Aug. 19.—Mrs. William Giberson, in jail charged with the murder of her husband, a taxi operator, today denied in the presence of newspapermen and her lawyer that she had killed him.

Mrs. Giberson also denied that she had ever written any affectionate letters to any other man. She declared she knew nothing about quarrels her husband is said to have had with other men.

She said she knew nothing of a check for $1,700 said to have been in her husband's possession when he was killed.

CROWE TO PROBE LIFE INSTITUTE AND ITS LEADER

The occult mysteries of the Life Institute, brought to fame through the complaints of dissatisfied "disciples," will be made the subject of an investigation by State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, it was announced yesterday.

Tomorrow, Mr. Crowe declared, he will assign an assistant to the case, who will call in witnesses regarding the rituals of the "economic religion" presided over at 162 East Ontario street by Albert J. Moore.

This, with the assurance from City Prosecutor Louis Piquett that additional information on the "classes" and "converts" has been gathered and will be produced on Tuesday, when the case will be reopened, failed to disturb the equanimity of the institute head. Mr. Moore reiterated his assertion that the "religion" will successfully withstand the prosecution.

DECLARES FOES DRAGGED KLAN INTO POLITICS

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 19.—The Ku Klux Klan does not belong in politics but has been dragged into it by opponents of the klan, Dr. W. H. Evans, Imperial Kligrapp or secretary of the organization, declared today, following a meeting of the officials of the sixty-eight Ku Klux Klan branches in Texas at the klan headquarters here.

"The klan picks no man for office, or should not. The members support as individuals the candidates they think best fitted for office. No klansman is permitted to use his klan membership for political purposes."

MASKED MEN TRY CAPTIVE; ACQUIT, SEND HIM HOME

Woodland 'Court' Follows Usual Procedure.

Monroe, La., Aug. 19.—Samuel Richards, a Moorehouse parish farmer, was seized by a band of fifteen masked men yesterday, carried into the woods and given a trial before a masked judge, twelve masked jurors, with masked prosecuting attorney and defense counsel, on a charge of complicity in the attempted murder of Dr. B. M. McKoin. He was acquitted and returned to his home.

The masked men swooped down on Richards while he was working on his farm late yesterday.

Upon reaching a secluded spot in the woods near his home, one of the men assumed the rôle of judge, another was assigned to defend him, a third to act as prosecuting attorney, while the remaining twelve composed the jury.

Follow Usual Procedure.

Then followed an investigation in which the usual court procedure was carried out in every detail.

"The prosecuting attorney" endeavored to connect Richards with the assault on Dr. McKoin, a former mayor of Merrouge, La., who was recently fired upon from ambush by unidentified persons.

Consider Alibi Established.

Then the defense counsel took up the effort to clear Richards. The former claimed an alibi. When the case was given to the jury, it decided the alibi was established, and ordered Richards released.

Following the acquittal, Richards was returned to his home by his captors. No violence was attempted.

Facing a possible deficit, due to the contemporary street car, elevated, and railroad strikes, the second annual Pageant of Progress at the Municipal pier will close tonight.

The week added to the original program was not sufficient to offset the damage done by transportation tieups, officials declared. Dr. John Dill Robertson, president of the pageant, estimated this year's attendance in paid admissions as less than half of the 1,000,000 that visited the first show.

"Industrial strikes prevented out-of-town visitors from coming to the pier," Dr. Robertson declared. "Last year the exhibits were crowded in the morning. Now the crowds come in the evening, and they are made up mostly of Chicago people.

"Business organizations and civic clubs from all over the country canceled the journey because of the strikes."

Good for Exhibitors.

The dark cloud had a silver lining, however, Dr. Robertson said, inasmuch as the exhibitors had a better year in 1922 than last—the theory being that smaller crowds mean more business.

Even should the potential deficit become an actuality, when the receipts are checked for the final time, the Pageant Foundation for Children will go ahead as planned, the head officials said. Ground will be broken for the institution in October, he declared.

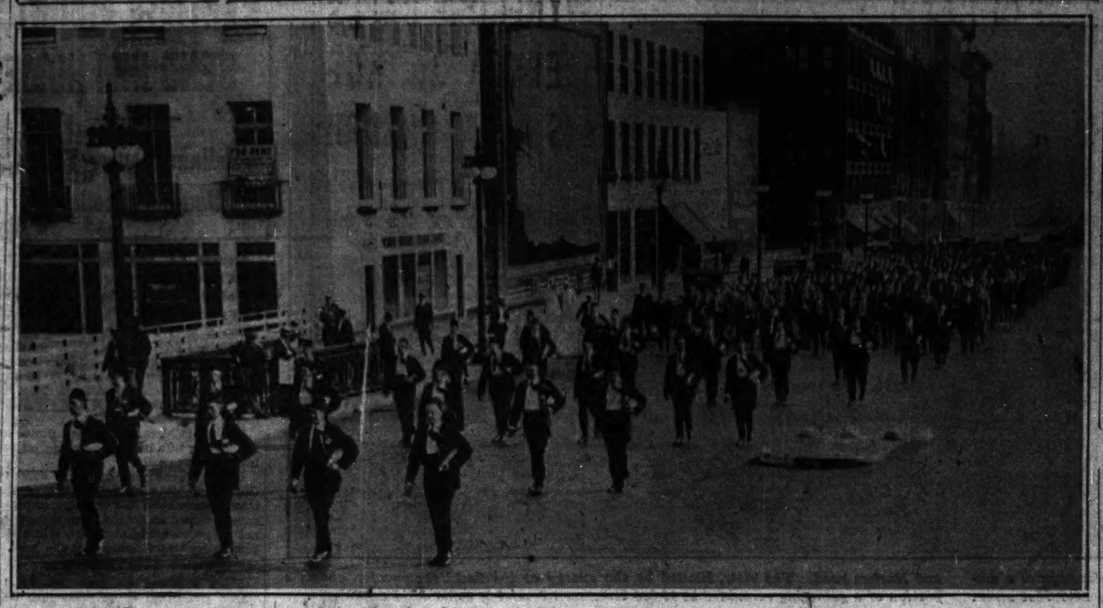
Befezzed Shriners, oriental bands, and drill teams marched through the loop to the pier yesterday. The day had been officially given over to the Shriners. Overhead, aviators continued to thrill the crowds with their stunts.

Crown Queen Today.

Miss Georgia Hale, who a week ago was chosen by a number of judges as the "Queen of the Pageant of Progress" and the "Pageant Queen of America," will come into her title today, Mayor Thompson officiating at the coronation. Together with the honor, the queen will receive a $1,000 check, as stipulated in the pre-pageant celebrations.

Five tiny Spads, flown by officers of the 1st Pursuit squadron, Air Service, U. S. A., will stage an aerial mock battle over the pier late this afternoon. The ships are of the type flown by American aviators in the great war and have been called the best stunt airplane ever built.

OVER THE SANDS TO THE PAGEANT



Twelve hundred Shriners paraded through the loop and down Michigan boulevard yesterday afternoon on their way to the Municipal pier, where their crack drill teams put on an exhibition that delighted thousands of spectators. Arab patrols, chanters, oriental band, and brass band were in the turnout. The Medinah Arab patrol gave an exhibition drill at 6 o'clock; at 7 there was a concert by Medinah's 100 piece military band; at 7:30 the chanters gave an oral concert, and at 8 o'clock the oriental band played desert music. JIM RYAN, ONCE 'CON KING' HERE, IS DYING IN EAST

James Ryan, one-time head of a national clairvoyant trust that cleaned up half a million from the "suckers," as he called them, is dying in Syracuse, N. Y., according to word received last night.

Ryan's headquarters were in Chicago in 1913. His brother, Frank, was with him. They made thousands from the men and women who sobbed their troubles to the "clairvoyant professors" in luxuriously any mystically furnished rooms. Then came exposure and in the crash Jimmy testified to paying graft for police protection.

Chief of Detectives John J. Halpin and two decteetive sergeants went to Joliet through Ryan's testimony and he won his pardon after serving a technical sentence.

His intricate clairvoyant system, with headquarters all over the nation, broken by the Chicago exposure, "Jimmy the Gent" left for his Wyoming ranch and so far as is known has been out of the "con" game since.

YOUNGEST GAME WARDEN IN U. S. SERVICE SLAIN

E. A. LINDGREN.

The body of E. A. Lindgren, 1435 East 69th place, said to be the youngest deputy federal game warden in the country, and who died last Friday in Council Bluffs, Ia., from bullet wounds inflicted by three men he met hunting in the woods, was brought to Chicago yesterday for burial.

Lindgren, 21 years old, a former soldier and a former assistant deputy warden in Illinois, met the three men last Sunday. They were armed with shotguns and he asked them for their licenses. In reply they shot him, one charge of shot striking his arm, the other two wounding him in the abdomen. After dragging himself for a mile through the woods, Lindgren was found by railroad track walkers, who took him to Council Bluffs.

One of the assailants was later found in the woods, suffering from a bullet wound. He said his companions had been afraid he would "squeal" and had attempted to kill him. He then told the police where to find the other two men. All three are held in Council Bluffs, charged with murder. Lindgren is survived by his widow, Mrs. Leona Lindgren, a baby daughter, his father and mother, and a sister.

MUSIC MASTER ENDS LIFE TO JOIN LOVELY SUICIDE

Damrosch's Successor Worshiped Dancer.

New York, Aug. 19.—A strange story of an elderly music master's infatuation for a youthful protégé that led both the master and the girl to suicide, was unfolded today by the wife of Louis Koemmenich, noted composer and conductor.

A week ago Vera Lehmann, a young actress known on the stage as Vera d'Artelle, was taken to Flower hospital suffering from poisoning. She had been found unconscious on the floor of her mother's costume shop. She died Monday morning.

Twelve hours later the body of Koemmenich, clad in silk pajamas, was found on the floor of an apartment in Ninety-first street, off Riverside Drive. The gascocks of a stove were turned on. Koemmenich had been asphyxiated. At his side was found a note, apparently scrawled in haste. It was not signed.

"Just received word that Vera committed suicide," it said. "This being a great loss to me, there is nothing else left for me to do."

Koemmenich was 55 years old, had been married thirty-six years and was the father of a son and two daughters, one of them married.

In 1913 he reached the heighth of his career, succeeding Walter Damrosch as conductor of the Oratorio Society. Previous to that time, he had had charge of a large German choral organization here and had achieved fame as director of a Philadelphia maennerchor that won the Emperor William prize three years under his leadership.

Mourned Germany's Defeat.

The world war came; Koemmenich's heart was with Germany, and when it was over he was broken in fortune. He stifled his pride and a year later started out as a musical director of a road company of "Aphrodite." His wife and family were a great deal concerned with him, but cheered him on his way.

And then the change. The director wrote to his wife of a young woman in the company, Vera Lehmann, who gave promise of golden attainment; she had a voice, she was beautiful, and she could dance. He was giving her vocal instruction. In nearly all his letters home, his wife said, he spoke of Vera.

Miss Lehmann welcomed the assistance Koemmenich gave her and when the company returned from tour she was a frequent caller at his home.

Wife Realizes Her Tragedy.

"People began to talk," Mrs. Koemmenich said today, "and I began to realize that a harmless relationship of pupil and master had grown into infatuation. I forbade Vera to call at my home when I was absent."

One day one of Koemmenich's daughters returned home to find that her father had attempted suicide. They sent for Miss Lehmann and, Mrs. Koemmenich said, "she came and sat for hours, holding his hand. I remained in the room all the time.

"During his illness she sent him flowers and they saw each other a great deal afterward. I saw it was useless to try to end the affair. We had been married thirty-six years and I hoped his reason would return to him."

Ten days ago Kommenich made a second attempt to end his life. One of his daughters then called on Miss Lehmann, she said, reminded her of the disparity in the ages of the dancer and her father and advised her to leave him alone.

Girl Found Unconscious.

Two days later Vera Lehmann was found unconscious in her mother's shop. Mrs. Koemmenich was out of the city when Koemmenich went to the 91st street apartment to end his life.

"They were both foolish," Mrs. Koemmenich said. "I don't blame the girl any more than I do my husband. He was 55 years old and she was 22.

"Who knows? Who can judge? I had my husband on a pedestal. By not judging maybe I can keep him there."

'Phantom Burglar' Nabbed After Hot Chase in Loop

Harris Williams, colored, who gained the title of the phantom burglar several years ago after he had stolen nearly $100,000 worth of furs from loop stores, was arrested yesterday after a chase down Wabash avenue. Williams was captured in the lobby of the Heyworth building by Policemen George Larson and B. Lodsdon after John Monahan, a watchman in the Goddard building, 27 East Monroe street, had told them there was a burglar in the building. On the second floor of the Goddard building the police found a sack containing thirty suits of clothes.

Daughter of Tumulty Recovering in Germany

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—Dispatches received here today said that Miss Mary Tumulty, daughter of Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President during the Wilson administration, was recovering rapidly and within ten days or two weeks would be able to leave the hospital in Germany where she was taken after an automobile accident last week.

GIRL OF THREE WINS HONORS AT SWIMMING MEET

When little Mary Hardy, 3 years old, grows up swimmers will have to show both speed and endurance to compete with her. She swam the length of the sixty foot tank in Patten gymnasium at Northwestern university yesterday in one of the feature events at the annual swimming contests of "kid" swimmers taught by Tom Robinson, swimming coach of the university.

There were fifty-six events, in which 300 children and grownups took part. About 150 gold, silver, and bronze medals were awarded to the winners of first, second, third, and fourth places.

In the relay race between a team of boys and a team of girls, each with 15, the girls won. They were captained by Virginia Cahill, 18, and the boys by Richard Cahill, 16, brother and sister. Ralph Breyer, in a 100 yard swim against time, went the distance in 57 seconds, this being better than the intercollegiate conference record. Julia Mellin and Ernest Palmer, each 7 years old, thrilled the crowd by their diving from a fifteen foot platform.

Germans Chase Away Band Which Plays 'Ueber Alles'

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—[By Tribune Wireless.]—Communists started a riot in a Brandenburg restaurant last night when the orchestra played "Deutschland Ueber Alles." The workmen chased out the orchestra, smashed the furniture, and installed themselves, singing "Internationale" until 2 o'clock this morning.

Thriller Near Fatal

Miss Ethel Dare furnished the supreme thrill at the Pageant of Progress yesterday in her mile high drop from a plane with a parachute. Due to rough water, the plane barely cleared the breakwater in the takeoff, then it circled high, until nearly lost to sight in the clouds. Miss Dare jumped and fell 300 feet before the parachute opened. The wind carried her a mile from the pier, and it was only by putting his power boat at full speed, outstripping all other craft, that Capt. Anderson of the life saving crew reached her in time to save her from drowning. While the life boat continued at full speed one of the guards leaped from the rail and caught Miss Dare just as she was going under from the weight of the parachute apparatus attached to her body.

Photos show the long fall from the plane before the parachute opened, the life saver diving from the power boat as Miss Dare struggled with the soggy parachute in the water, and the woman, after her rescue, seated in the small speed boat which carried her ashore.

ONE SIP OF CAAPI AND "LO" RAISES THE DEVIL-DEVIL

Old Indian Dance, Thought Extinct, Is Discovered.

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Returning today on the steamship Polycarp from South America, where he had been for eighteen months a member of the Mulford biological exploration expedition which explored the Amazon basin, Gordon MacCreagh, ethnologist, brought back with him still and motion pictures of the caapi, a devil-devil dance, which scientists have thought extinct, but which still flourishes among Indians on the Tiqui river.

"The caapi takes its name from the drink which is used in the dance," Mr. MacCreagh said. "The drink is made from a vine which is cut down and boiled. The ceremonial lasts two or three days. The Indians dress in full regalia with many feathers and ornaments.

No Equal Rights Here.

"Early on the second afternoon the chief offers the caapi bowl to the dancers. At dusk the women are ordered to the barracks, the chinks are covered, and guards are posted to prevent the women from observing the dance, for it is death for the women who see it.

"The dancers settle down to a serious mood. Suddenly you hear the devil-devil in the distance. He is called jumpary. The jumpary blows his horn with a penetrating sound which grows nearer and nearer until suddenly you notice four or five men you have not seen before. One of them is the devil in disguise. The devil is supposed to have entered into him.

Mutual Flagellation Society.

"One of the dancers then taps one of the devil-devils on the shoulder. The jumpary man unlooses a long whip, and the lash whistles on the shoulders and belly of the dancer. If the dancer winces it means the devil-devil will get him some time in the woods and his life won't be worth a bead. If he does not flinch, it is his turn and the lash is now laid on the devil-devil.

The devil-devils have to go through the ordeal many times for there are thirty or forty dancers in the ceremony. The dancers are as proud of their scars as the old German student of his duelling scars."

PROBE BURNED BOY'S DEATH.

West Chicago avenue police are investigating the death of 3 year old Casimer Monterys, 1237 North Wood street. He died of burns received late on Friday.

FEAR FOUL PLAY

DR. IRVING R. BROWNING.

W. A. Grant, chief special agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, last night appealed to the police to aid in the search for Dr. Irving R. Browning who, it is feared, may have met with foul play at the hands of striking railroad shopmen. He was last seen on Aug. 9.

Dr. Browning is a member of the staff of the Washington Boulevard hospital and is also employed on the staff of the chief surgeon of the railroad. Since the strike of the shopmen, however, he has spent most of his time among the railroad employés, either in the Galewood or Western avenue yards or the chief surgeon's office.

The last time he was seen he was on his way to the Western avenue yards and the police are working on the theory that he was waylaid by strikers because of his medical service to nonunion men. Dr. Browning is married and lives in Oak Park. At present his wife is visiting in Michigan.

Kentucky Pastor Sues Members for $100,000

Alexandria, Ky., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Suit for $100,000 damages was filed today in the Campbell county Circuit court by the Rev. Paul B. Roedinger, pastor of the St. Paul German Evangelical Protestant church, against twenty-one members of the congregation. It is the fifth suit brought in the controversy since last April, when a faction voted for the clergyman's dismissal. Mr. Roedinger charges that the members have conspired "to ruin and impoverish and drive him out of the city."

WYNECOOP CALLS REPORT DR. ROE IS ALIVE ABSURD

With Him When He Died, Physician Says.

An emphatic denial that Dr. J. Newton Roe, once head of the College of Dental Surgery, proprietor of a medical school, a pathological laboratory, and a school of undertaking and embalming, is alive was made yesterday by Dr. Gilbert H. Wynekoop. Dr. Wynekoop signed the death certificate on which a body, said to be that of Roe, was buried.

Persistent reports that the man is alive resulted yesterday in the story receiving newspaper publicity. The rumors, which have been circulating about Chicago for several months, are to the effect that Dr. Roe is alive and in South America.

With Him at Death, Doctor Says.

"The whole thing is absurd," said Dr. Wynekoop. "Do you believe that I would be so foolish as to sign a death certificate that was not honest? Do you think the government officials would not go into the matter if they were not satisfied that Dr. Roe is dead and buried?

"Dr. Roe was taken ill at the Plaza hotel. He was attended there by Dr. L. J. Quitman, the house physician, who sent him to the Lake View hospital. I found him there. He was dying, suffering from violent hemorrhages. He died ten minutes after I arrived at his side.

"I can give you the names of ten persons who knew him and who saw the body. They will all testify that the body was that of Dr. Roe."

Dr. Wynekoop's statement was corroborated by Dr. Quitman.

Under Prison Sentence.

Dr. Roe was under sentence by a federal court at the time of his death. He became involved with the federal government in 1920 as a result of liquor sales in the New Southern hotel. Added to this litigation were several suits of a civil nature.

In March, 1921, Judge Landis sentenced Dr. Roe to eighteen months in the Atlanta penitentiary. He never served any of the sentence. The case was appealed and before further action could be taken he died.

The body, purporting to be that of Dr. Roe, was buried near Valparaiso, Ind. The rumors are that another body was substituted and that the death was a hoax to escape the federal prison. The body at Valparaiso has been exhumed, but decay had set in and identification was not positive.

Now Ready to Employ Saleswomen and Help

Tomorrow, Monday, August 21st, young men and women desiring employment may apply at our temporary employment office, Room 1516, North American Bldg., 36 So. State St. Each and every applicant will be courteously received and interviewed with extreme conscientiousness.

For those not familiar with the Bedell organization here are facts which should be of interest to you.

The Largest Chain of Exclusive Women's Shops in the World

At present there are Bedell Fashion Shops in New York, Brooklyn, Syracuse, Rochester, Philadelphia, Boston, Bridgeport, Newark, Milwaukee, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, St. Louis. New stores are to be opened as fast as possible in other principal cities—Cleveland and Detroit the latest announcements.

Every Bedell Fashion Shop is a replica of the magnificent shop in New York—featuring simultaneously the same merchandise in similarly perfectly appointed salons.

The Bedell Stores are Successful Due to An Idea

The phenomenal success of the Bedell stores is due to an idea! This idea is to offer at lowest possible prices a wide variety of the smartest new women's apparel styles—and to offer them simultaneously with their appearance in the Metropolitan City.

In no Bedell store is an extra charge made for Style—Bedell prices represent intrinsic value—Style Without Extravagance is the Bedell motto! Our immense buying facilities enable us to offer the best at the usual cost of the ordinary! Fashionable and economical women everywhere appreciate this!

The Chicago Store Will Open Early in September

The building at the corner of State and Monroe Streets is being remodeled to conform with the Bedell Stores, and when the alterations are completed it will be one of the largest, handsomest and most magnificently appointed women's specialty stores in the City.

The store will be distinctly a Chicago store—with a manager well informed as to the demands of Chicago shoppers. He will need to assist him:

Experienced Waist Saleswomen
Experienced Coat Saleswomen
Experienced Suit Saleswomen
Experienced Skirt Saleswomen
Experienced Dress Saleswomen
Experienced Millinery Saleswomen

In each of these departments he will need stock girls, shipping clerks, errand boys, wrappers and porters.

In the workrooms we will need a manager, mantailors, skilled alteration dressmakers and fitters. We will require experienced stenographers, telephone operators, cashiers, bookkepers, etc.

As we have no desire to antagonize other Chicago stores we will naturally give preference to people not now employed.

Applicants may call tomorrow or any day during the week between the hours of 9 a. m. and 5 p. m., Room 1516, North American Building, 36 So. State St. Ask for our Employment Manager, who will be found at this address until further notice specially to interview local applicants.

CITY MAY BLOCK DR. BUNDESEN'S DISEASE PLANS

Ettelson Calls Him for Talk on Law.

Health Commissioner Bundesen's anti-venereal disease campaign may come to a dead stop tomorrow, as the result of legal objections raised by Arthur Burrage Farwell, president of the Chicago Law and Order league, which yesterday were given the tentative approval of the city law department.

After a conference with Corporation Counsel Ettelson, James W. Breen, second in command of the city law department, endeavored to make an appointment with Dr. Bundesen. The commissioner was not in his office and Mr. Breen left word that the commissioner's presence is desired in the city law department.

Called "Extra Legal" Efforts.

Although the city lawyers would make no statement beyond asserting that they desire to point out "a number of things" to the commissioner in connection with his physical examinations of prostitutes, it was learned that in the opinion of the lawyers Dr. Bundesen's actions have been extra legal.

An old state law, passed in 1874, declaring it unlawful for a health board to provide "in any manner for the medical inspection or examinations of inmates of houses of ill fame" is to be called to the attention of the commissioner, with the ruling that it is still in effect.

The commissioner already has pointed out that there is a city ordinance requiring him to examine "all persons" with contagious diseases. To this stand, it is understood, the law department will reply that a state law overrides a city ordinance. Another "out" which the commissioner may take is that he has no official knowledge that the women are prostitutes.

End of Campaign Possible.

The lawyers then may point out to Dr. Bundesen that his public admissions concerning his knowledge of vice conditions have been startling and that he should turn this information over to Chief Fitzmorris. This, the commissioner's friends contend, would checkmate his plans entirely, for if information gained by the health department is to be turned over to the police the stream of women through the department's laboratories on orders of resort proprietors will stop abruptly.

In answering scores of letters, Dr. Bundesen has invariably included the following paragraph in his letters defending his position:

"With syphilis causing one-tenth of all deaths, producing 20 per cent of the inmates of our institutions for the insane (whose total population approximates the population of our universities), with gonorrhea as the chief cause of sterility and the principal contributor to the gynecologic wards of the hospitals—in combination, a group of diseases which in the height of the war took more men out of the line of battle than shot, shell, and gas, then we must realize that there is something wrong with our system."

90 Per Cent Applaud.

Nearly 90 per cent of the letters received by Dr. Bundesen dealing with his venereal disease plans are congratulatory. Excerpts from a few of them are as follows:

Dr. P. J. H. Farrell—Hold the line and don't give up an inch of the ground that you have gained. The fire of the enemy is scattered; yours is direct and centered upon one objective and will win the battle.

Dr. Joseph G. Berkowitz, medical director of the Public Health institute—"I fully agree with you in the necessity of providing and enforcing proper prophylactic measures, whatever they may be, for the prevention of venereal diseases and saving the community its resulting costs."

Dr. William E. Buehler—"Your logic and practice in handling venereals are to be commended. Prudishness should be pushed aside."

Dr. James W. Walker—"Congratulations on your program and on your article in THE TRIBUNE. Such plain speaking is exactly what is needed."

Logical and Scientific.

Dr. T. L. Rhoads, surgeon 6th Corps area—"I congratulate you on these logical and scientific methods which you propose to pursue in meeting this world problem."

Bernard C. Roloff, executive secretary of the Illinois Social Hygiene league—"I am glad to see that some one in this town has the courage of his convictions. However, much the opponents of your suggestions may decry it, you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have put through a great newspaper a story which for helpful frankness is a trail-blazer."

KING OF SPAIN WINS BIG BET ON YANKEE JOCKEY

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

DEAUVILLE, Aug. 19.—King Alfonso of Spain won 35,000 francs backing the American jockeys at the races this afternoon. After Frank O'Neill won the opening event Alfonso congratulated the American rider who tops the list of winning jockeys.

The democratic habits of the king and the respect for his incognito here, where he passes as the Duke of Toledo, is in marked contrast to the homage paid him in Spain. In Madrid when the king appears in public the people follow, waiting for him to drop cigaret butts, as he is an incessant smoker, and they keep the cork-tipped ends with the royal monogram as souvenirs.

Today Alfonso suddenly discovered he had no matches and turned to a man passing, who happened to be a well known Frenchman, to ask for a light. Not noticing the king's identity the Frenchman hurried on without granting the request, saying over his shoulder, "Excuse me, I must hurry and get my bet down before the horses are off."

AND THE STEVEDORES STRIKE.

Port Arthur, Ont., Aug. 19.—Unloading of several ships was impeded today due to the walkout of 300 freight truckers, employed by the Western Stevedore company. The strikers protests a wage reduction.

POPE PIUS GETS AUTO; TO RIDE IN VATICAN GARDEN

ROME, Aug. 19.—[By Associated Press.]—The people of Milan, where Pope Pius was archbishop before his selection, have presented the pontiff with an automobile. It is mauve colored and bears on the doors the papal coat of arms, surrounded by the triple crown and the pontifical keys. The pontiff, it is said, will use the car within the vatican gardens, which he now circles twice daily in his promenades.

This is the first time a pope ever has owned an automobile. Some of the cardinals in late years, however, have been possessors of gas propelled cars. Cardinal Vincenzo Vanutelli was the first of the cardinals to have a car, it having been presented to him by American Catholics.

Cardinal Merry Del Val, when papal secretary of state, also had a machine in which he was wont to motor to the seashore 13 miles from Rome to bathe. Vatican officials today remarked the change from relatively recent times when ecclesiastics were forbidden even to ride bicycles.

Union Leader Held After Bombings in Car Strike

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 19.—Robert C. Lacy, former president of the Central Labor Council of Buffalo, was arrested tonight accused of having furnished the explosive that was used in the recent outrages against the street railway property.

Cuban Senator Has Busy Week on "Field of Honor"

HAVANA, Cuba, Aug. 19.—Col. Rosendo Collazo, senator from Camaguey, and Col. Orestes Ferrera, representative for Havana province, were wounded today in dueling with swords. The former suffered a cut in the right shoulder and the latter a slash across the face. The encounter resulted from news stories appearing in Ferrera's paper on a recent affray in Mariano, a suburb, in which two of the senator's nephews lost their lives. In a similar encounter last Thursday Col. Collazo wounded the director of another Havana newspaper.

Des Moines City Employes Arrested as Embezzlers

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 19.—Another city hall scandal, involving an alleged shortage of between $50,000 and $75,000 in the funds of the street department, was uncovered at the city hall today by state checkers. Two city employés, Russell Cockburn, timekeeper in the streets department, and Cole Berthoff, clerk in the finance department, are arrested and held on charges of embezzlement.

The discovery of the shortage followed the indictment of Mary Frase and John Bachman, employés of the parks department, in connection with a $23,000 deficit.

LOCOMOTIVES IN HEAD-ON CRASH FAIR THRILLER

Aurora, Ill., Aug. 19.—Fifty thousand persons packed the grand stand and bleachers and massed around the half mile track at the Central States fair grounds today to see a head-on collision of speeding locomotives in the center of the field.

The throng was worked up to a high pitch of excitement before the collision by a continuod ringing of the engine bells and repeated long blasts of the whistles. Finally the word was given, and from marks 1,700 feet apart the locomotives were speeded at each other by engineers who leaped from the cabs as they pulled the throttles wide open.

The thousands in the grand stand rose to their feet as the locomotives raced towards each other, and when they met the throng united in a shriek that almost drowned the deafening crash of the colliding engines.

Movie Photographers Busy.

The locomotives reared upon each other, snorting steam and fire. Moving picture men ground their cameras frantically. Small particles of iron flew like hail, but the photographers dashed here and there to get better views of the eruption. The escaping steam hissed with the volume of a million geese for a period and then began to die.

The locked hulks became quiet, but the crowd stayed on, waiting for a last eruption then reluctantly arose and went away.

The great part of the crowd at the fair was from Chicago. They came in thousands of automobiles out the Roosevelt road. Before the engine collision they were entertained by running horse races and circuses and visits to the buildings in which were exhibited thousands of head of the nation's blooded live stock, manufactured and farm products and an art gallery in which were hung a million dollars' worth of paintings by the foremost artists.

Special Sunday Features.

Added features of the fair tomorrow, which will enter upon the third day of its nine day run, will include automobile races by dirt track champions; fourteen hippodrome acts from London and New York and night shows.

LODGE FACES THE FIGHT OF HIS LIFE IN OLD BAY STATE

Victory or Defeat to Crown 36 Years of Service.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, at the age of 72, rounding out thirty-six years of continuous service in congress, is going to crown his career with either the greatest triumph or the first defeat he has experienced.

Dean of the senate, in which he is serving his thirtieth year, Mr. Lodge as a candidate for a sixth term, and he is just now approaching the renomination hurdle in the Republican primary on Sept. 12. If he wins the primary, as now seems probable, he is not unlikely to find himself in for a desperate fight with the Democratic nominee in the November election.

Hottest Contest of All.

The hottest, the most spectacular political battle in the country this year is getting under way in Massachusetts. All because of the candidacy of Lodge for reflection and of the extensive and imposing array of his foes from near and far who have sworn vengeance upon him and are mustering all their resources to beat him.

It is a dizzy pinnacle from which his enemies are endeavoring to hurl him. They hardly could have picked one who had farther to fall, and certain it is that to defeat a president would not afford them half the satisfaction of defeating Lodge.

For Lodge is not only the Great Brahmin of the aristocratic New England intelligentsia, scholar, historian, analyst, member of the American Academy of Immortals, honored with the degrees of a dozen colleges, but he is the Republican leader of the senate, the Republican party's favorite for national convention chairman for thirty years, and more than any other man the personification of the G. O. P.

Respect Versus Affection.

If it may not be said that the little, slender Nestor of Nahant, with the grizzled hair and beard and the bored expression of a loftier being is not greatly beloved, it must be admitted that he is widely and deeply respected for his attainments and valued for his service to his state.

So far such friends and supporters have far outnumbered his enemies, who now include those women who cannot forgive him for opposing equal suffrage, the drys who cannot forget his vote against the prohibition amendment, the labor radicals, and the Wilson Democrats, who blame him for the defeat of the league of nations covenant.

"We would rather beat Lodge than all the rest of the Republican candidates in the whole country," recently remarked one of the big men of the Wilson administration.

Wilsonians Lead the Attack.

Undeterred by the disastrous experience of Mr. Wilson in endeavoring to beat Jim Reed in his own party, the Democratic national organization is reputed to be planning to concentrate on the effort to defeat Lodge, if the Republicans renominate him. Former Gov. Cox of Ohio, Democratic nominee for president in 1920, now in Europe getting more intimately acquainted with the league of nations, is expected home in time to lead the revenge movement.

If you had listened, as I did today, to a group of Republican leaders in this state sizing up public dissatisfaction with the Republican administration, the Republican congress and the Republican party, you would think the defeat of Lodge in the primary a foregone conclusion.

The workingmen and the farmers, it was said, are discontented here, as almost everywhere else. There have been numerous strikes in the industrial cities, the most serious in the Lawrence textile mills, the manufacturers and business men are still waiting for a protective tariff to restore the promised prosperity, and, on top of all that, the conservative New Englanders are denouncing the administration for failure to pursue a more vigorous policy in the coal and rail strikes.

They Miss the Big Stick.

Some blame the President, while others say they have been disillusioned concerning that "strong cabinet" Mr. Harding promised in his acceptance speech. Members of the cabinet have been kept busy explaining why the President was not swinging the big stick.

I was told of letters Secretary of War Weeks is said to have written stating the administration feared that vigorous action in the coal and rail strikes would precipitate civil war.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover is quoted by New England railway executives as warning them to settle to avoid civil war.

Weeks, Lodge, and other New Englanders in Washington have been deluged with irate remonstrances from this section against a feeble strike policy. They have been told that if we are so close to civil war as is asserted it can only be postponed at best, and it would be better to have it now. It is interesting to note that Lodge was active in urging the President to address congress and announce a firm policy.

Like Breath to Their Nostrils.

On account of the close identification of Lodge with the administration and with Republican policies, generally, the senator's chances of renomination are not being improved by this dissatisfaction in his own party, extending all the way from plutocrat to proletariat. But the Republicans say Lodge is going to be renominated and reelected in spite of the unpopularity of the Republican administration and the Republican congress.

"You see, Lodge is an institution," said one, "like the Sacred Codfish or Old South Meeting house. Massachusetts venerates her institutions."

Lodge is so confident of winning the primary that he is making no canvass. His friends say he will win four to one.

The Senator's Opponent.

Joseph Walker, the senator's opponent in the primary, is making the race because he was unable to induce any one else to challenge Lodge. At first he said he realized Lodge could not be beaten; now he says Lodge can be beaten and in another week he expects to be able to say Lodge will be beaten.

Walker, a former Bull Mooser, has been encouraged to believe that he will be carried to victory by the same powerful forces of protest that have enabled numerous progressives to defeat old guardsmen in the Republican primaries this year.

Walker is a tall, stalwart, fine looking man, of 57 years, the son of the "Gray Eagle of Quinsigamond," who was in congress for ten years. He was a classmate of Gifford Pinchot at Phillips Exeter academy, an '87 man at Brown university, and a law school graduate and honorary master of arts at Harvard. He has five children, three of them sons. Two of the sons are managing his campaign and his daughters-in-law are working for him.

Walker was a member of the Massachusetts house of representatives for eight years and speaker from 1909 to 1911. He was twice a candidate for governor on the Republican ticket in 1912 and on the Progressive ticket in 1914.

BONUS BILL TO HAVE ITS CHANCE NEXT WEDNESDAY

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The long delayed soldiers' bonus bill will be taken up for consideration in the senate next Wednesday in accordance with the agreement that it should follow the tariff bill in legislative program.

Efforts were made following the passage of the tariff bill late today to get an agreement fixing a definite time to vote on the bonus measure. These were futile, however, Senator Borah [Idaho] being unrelenting in his determination not to permit any such unanimous consent agreement.

Indications are that the bonus debate will drag along for several weeks, although its supporters are inclined to the view that the discussion after the first few days will not be prolonged. Senator Borah declared that he himself could talk at least two weeks in opposition to the measure.

Hanford MacNider, national commander of the American Legion, who is in Washington in the interest of the bonus legislation, said today that his conferences with senators had convinced him that favorable action on the bill was forthcoming in the near future.

"I am sure that the bill will be passed by an overwhelming majority," he said.

DOWNING STREET IS FALLING DOWN; PUTTING IN PROPS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Following the departure of the occupants for holidays, workmen began shoring up the underpinning at 10 and 11 Downing street, the official residences of Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Chamberlain. It has been discovered that both houses have been in danger of falling down, and some time ago Mr. Lloyd George warned against allowing dancing on the upper floors.

Politicians are joking about the underpinning, Mr. Lloyd George being the leader of the liberal element and Mr. Chamberlain of the conservatives.

The building, which is the last in the row built 300 years ago by Mr. Downing, an army contractor, on a mud foundation with the poorest sort of brick. It is said to be a wonder that they have stood so long. Plans now being carried out for repairs contemplate making them good for 200 years more.

THEY STOLE AWAY

Well, it wasn't exactly an elopement. It was just a little surprise affair, quietly arranged. The quietude was sought to avoid all the fuss and feathers of a "big formal affair."

That's the way H. O. "Hi" Wood put it yesterday. Mr. Wood acted as generallissimo in charge, and incidentally as the best man, at the wedding of his friend, Arthur C. Uihlein wealthy Milwaukeean, to Mrs. Blanche Van Brunt Reilly at the Drake hotel. The ceremony was held at 6 p. m. The Rev. Gardner A. MacWhorter of St. Edmunds Episcopal church officiating. Mrs. Fred Rugee and Mr. Wood, who is proprietor of the Wisconsin hotel, Milwaukee, were the only guests.

Mr. Uihlein, who is 43 years old and the son of the late Charles Uihlein, a founder of the Schlitz Brewing company, is an official of the Waukesha Roxo company. His family holdings total more than $20,000,000, it is said. The bride, the daughter of a Horicon, Wis., manufacturer, is the widow of Charles Reilly, Milwaukee haberdasher. The couple, after a sojourn in Canada, will be at home at 611 Newberry boulevard, Milwaukee.

STRAYING HEART, GOOD CONSCIENCE LEAD TO ASYLUM

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—County Judge McMahon in Brooklyn today heard a strange and moving tale of a young woman's disillusionment in love, told by the girl herself, though the tragedy which has come into her life has unhinged her mind and made it necessary to commit her to an institution for the insane.

Miss Vera Anderson, 27, of Brooklyn, young, pretty, highly educated, and an accomplished musician, was before Judge McMahon as the result of medical affidavits concerning her mental condition.

In dull, somber tones, the young woman told Judge McMahon that about a year ago she had found herself falling in love with the husband of her dearest girl friend. The man loved her, she said, and the other woman knew of their love.

The man begged her to forget that he was married and fly with him, she said. Then she realized what a grievous wrong she was doing her friend. She told the man their love must end.

"I tore all thought of my love from my mind," said Miss Anderson, "and left only a blank in its place."

Judge McMahon learned from King's county hospital physicians her mind is so shattered that, although she was an expert musician and linguist, she now cannot play the piano except discordantly nor can she read or speak exactly except in English.

Describing it as one of the saddest cases ever to come under his judicial notice, the judge committed Miss Anderson to King's Park asylum.

THE RISING TIDE OF GOVERNMENT.

In Illinois there was an attempt to govern by disfranchisement. It was made in the constitutional convention with the proposal to restrict Chicago's representation in the general assembly so that state law would not be affected by Chicago opinion. Restriction was asked because of Chicago's customs and alleged bad moral ideas. For lawmaking purposes a Chicago citizen was to be about two-fifths of a citizen, because he was supposed to have ideas and habits not approved in other sections of the state or by some people in his own.

It was a serious attempt, and it was nearly successful in writing an article in the proposed constitution.

In Kansas there is an effort to govern by suppression of opinion. The issue between William Allen White and the state involves only the posting of a placard of part sympathy with strikers. It is called conspiracy. The wording of the placard was not inflammatory. It was an expression of opinion regarding the equities in a strike outlawed by the state.

The purpose of prohibiting expression by placard is to prevent encouragement of men who have quit work collectively in an essential industry. The push of logic is hardly escapable. If expression by a poster is injurious to the state, expression in newspaper publication and in public meeting is more injurious and the law, to be effective and consistent, must be comprehensive.

If Mr. White can say anything he wants to in his newspaper, the policy which the law advocates is not carried out. If its principle is accepted, its range must be extended, and we have no right to assume that this would not be the outcome. If the state has an object to attain, it will strengthen its laws to attain it. That object is the limitation or restriction of free speech.

Here in midwest American states are two illustrations of fundamental law in transition. In one case the extraordinary reversal of American political rights nearly got into a proposed constitution. In the other an extraordinary restriction of the right of comment on industrial issues is in the law of the state.

In Wisconsin we have La Follette advocating that the law of the nation shall be what congress says it is, without the intervention of the Supreme court interpreting the constitution and applying it to the statutes passed by congress. That is the substitution of statute law for fundamental law. The fundamental law guarantees citizenship against the aggressions of varying majorities in varying times disturbed by varying emotions or promoting varying dogmas.

Americans are quick people with statutes. Majorities can be assembled behind moral issues, issues relating to habit and thought and involving individual liberty. When a legislature, national or state, yields to the push of these majorities, or frequently of energetic minorities and groups, it takes the shortest cut. For a while the short cut was the interstate commerce act. Child labor is an injurious thing, at least in most phases. We tried to override the states by using the interstate commerce law to prohibit the interstate transport of articles in which child labor had a part.

In a law intended to end traffic in women in professionalized, commercialized vice, the Mann act, the crossing of a state line by people in no way engaged in commercialized vice added a possible prison sentence to the punishment of an offense for which no state in the Union would send a person to the penitentiary. Traffic in women deserves punishment in the penitentiary, but no state holds that irregularity is punishable by such a sentence.

There is an attempt to invade the police powers of the state, which represent the ability of the people in self-government, by a congressional bill which would allow the national government to step in when law is violated by lynching. Mob violence being terrible, it is assumed that the right of the people to govern themselves must be invaded because some of them occasionally do it badly.

Illinois furnished a horrible example in Herrin, but in spite of that shall the American form of government be changed to create a tribunal in the centralized government? Some states are backward in education. To reduce the number of illiterates it is proposed to create a federal bureau of education. Whenever a defect is found in government of the people by the people, it is proposed to establish an agency of central government to correct it.

We are not to have the police power of a community protect the movies from the errors, designs, or indiscretions of producers, but are to have a central board of censorship. Books must be submitted to central censorship.

The complexities of the income tax require a constant, persistent challenge of business all over the country, a systematic inquisition into the affairs of producers and distributors. It may be necessary, but every business man feels that he has an agent of government at his desk.

Prohibition enforcement necessarily requires supervision of the individual. We have Sabbatarian movements which would invade conscience. The rising tide of government has rolled in and the possible danger of the American people is in their senility and their carelessness. They are experimental and transitional. They like patent medicine. They are impatient and hunt short cuts. They may some day wake up to wonder if Jefferson were not right when he said that the best government was the least government.

"KNOCKED OFF."

Two Chicago youths who had just murdered a man by felling him and trampling on his head gave themselves up to the police with the genial report: "We just knocked off a guy over on Garfield boulevard."

Accounts differ as to motive, but according to the most favorable explanation the young men acted on the appeal of a woman who said their victim had attacked her daughter. At the inquest the girl denied an attack, so an adjournment was taken to investigate more thoroughly.

What lies on the surface is what in fact is most important. Murder, the taking of life, has become so common in this community and meets with such uncertain and inadequate punishment that it may be treated almost as a joke. To most of us murder is an awesome word, and the thought of taking life even by accident is painful and horrifying. But a good many of us don't seem to share this feeling. They can talk of killing as "knocking a guy off," half joke and half brag.

Perhaps the young men who killed the motorman were actuated by chivalrous motives, the defense of childhood or womanhood, or something like that. They may have thought their victim a pervert who ought to be put out of the way. Knocking a guy off may be nothing at all in their lives, but after all a community which permits young men to get into that state of mind is something short of civilized.

There is no question Chicago and other large cities in America are gravely lacking in the discipline which makes life respected. We find every possible excuse for killing. A coroner's jury, not long ago, held the murderer of a woman guiltless because he was drunk when he killed. Men who endanger life by reckless driving escape proper punishment. Gun toting goes on without any serious check. Women who kill from jealousy are set free by sentimental jurors. Lawyer accomplices of criminals practice flourishingly year after year. There is a killing a day in Chicago, and of these one of every two or three are murders.

The responsibility for this lies upon the shoulders of the law abiding, for we cannot expect the rough to chain up his own violence or the crook to play straight. The morale of many communities, both metropolitan and rural, is low in this country, especially in the matter of violence, and we live in some sense in a sort of perpetual siege by criminal impulse. At bottom this is a problem of religion, education and social environment. But it is also a question of discipline, and that we can have without waiting, if we will. New York has recently had a cleanup of criminals and we are in a similar process now.

But its success is going to depend upon public opinion. If that opinion is indifferent or sentimental toward people in jeopardy from their own evil acts, there will be slack discipline and a continuation of the conditions which shame us. If the public shows appreciation for vigorous enforcement of law, juries and judges will mete out adequate penalties. A murderer on the gallows is a reminder which will save many a life. We have had too few. Assaults, acts of violence of all varieties, and the carrying of deadly weapons should all be penalized certainly, swiftly, and severely.

But let each one of us remember that our attitude and our spirit as citizens control the whole situation. There will be no efficient prosecution of crime unless there is a vigorous public opinion to demand it, to support it, and to reward it with hearty approval. The officers of the law, from the patrolman to the chief, from the deputy to the sheriff and coroner, the state's attorney and his assistants, the judges and the juries, should all be made to feel that their energy, skill, and determination in the punishment of crime will win not only the support but the appreciation of the public. Only by making this clear can law abiding citizenship combat the tendency to crime and contempt for life and law.

LA FOLLETTE.

Nearly four years have passed since the armistice, and in that period we have never heard a man who voted for America's entry into the war, a man who voted for the selective draft, a volunteer or an inducted man in the army, explaining or justifying his action. The men who took the responsibility and the men who did the work in behalf of what the vast majority believed to be the best interests of this country are willing to stand on their records, and let these records speak for them. That they are right in policy is proved by the fact that they are unquestioned.

This fact brings into startling contrast the conduct of men who are defending their action in relation to the war. Without exception they are men who opposed our participation in it, either before or after our declaration, or in both periods. Whenever we meet such a man we find him defending his position. The others do not have to offer defense. He does. Thereby he proves the weakness of his position. The speeches of Senator La Follette in the German districts of Wisconsin, seeking renomination to the senate, are outstanding examples. Constant excuses are a confession of error.

If Wisconsin accepts the dictation of the boss to make him its spokesman in the United States senate it will put itself in a definite minority there. That will get it nothing, however perfectly such a representative may reflect the opinion of his state. It is poor tactics, to say the least.

AUSTRALIA TO CANADA: HAVE A HEART.

A Winnipeg editor replies to THE TRIBUNE'S suggestion that Great Britain turn over West Indian naval bases in part settlement of the loan by pointing a finger at Guam and the Philippines. Their military position with regard to Japan is that of the British West Indies with regard to the Panama canal, and the Canadian editor thinks we ought not to ask the British to get off our shoulder while we remain on Japan's.

The man is right except for a few facts. Guam would be a spear head pointed at Japan if we had not knocked the spear point off by agreeing not to fortify and if it were not encircled by Japanese submarine bases which we carelessly allowed to pass from the hands of Spain to Germany when we might have had them all and which passed as spoils of war to Japan from Germany. We paid Spain for what we acquired, but didn't buy enough, as it proved.

We do not owe Japan any money, and Japan has not made an offer for Guam and the Philippines. There is a real intrigue of the interest in trying to imagine what Great Britain and Australia and New Zealand would say if America told Japan that the islands were no good to us and told her to take them. Then Japan would be sitting on the shoulder of Australasia, and we are sure a great many British and all the Australasians would call the American surrender of the islands an unfriendly act. If the rising tide of color ever spreads over the British in that part of the Pacific it will be by way of the Philippines, and so long as the United States keeps them it is a buffer.

Canada should take some suggestions from Australia on this question. It means nothing to us, but it does mean something to the British. If we really wanted to be cogent we might say that unless Great Britain listened to the mild statement of our military needs in the Caribbean we'd surrender Guam and the Philippines.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

Late corn is springing up in the garden, bold in the humid August heat and strong in its race against the frost to fill out its ears before the garden droops and blackens in some still clear night. A goldfinch alights on a sunflower and it, too, is bold, more than bold; a yellow audacity, daring to be so small and so intimate, a speck unafraid.

The corn races the frost but the goldfinch says seeds are ripening which seed eaters love and that they will be ready for the warbler migration which is coming to flutter in and out of the thickets.

A chickadee alights in a hazel bush and sings. He also is a real audacity and a warning to the corn. The song is his song of winter. He is back again. When he went away he was singing his spring song and off to the north. He is back with his winter song, the one which he sings in bushes over snowdrifts. It is assertion of cheer when he shakes snow from the twigs as he touches them. But what cheer now when the ruby throat is tasting the sirups of the nicotinia, when the corn is racing the frost, and when the phlox is a glowing mass of colors in the evening light?

Swallows fill the sky in that same light, but there is only a fragment of the August ticket in the hand.

UNIFY RAILROAD REGULATION

One of the most obvious flaws in our system of regulation of the railroads is the assignment of the rate problem to one body and of the wage problem to another. The interstate commerce commission and the labor board should be consolidated for the simple and conclusive reason that they deal with the same problem fundamentally.

The rate question cannot be determined without consideration of the principal element in the cost of transportation, which is wages. The wage question cannot or ought not to be examined without consideration of the fund out of which wages must be paid.

Of course, both bodies give consideration to these related factors, but they cannot give the consideration they should and would if as one body they were responsible for the whole solution. Coördination must be imposed by a unified responsibility. It cannot be expected from voluntary coöperation. Any experience or observation of the workings of separate bureaus or departments puts that beyond argument. As a matter of practical working the commission is under pressure from one direction, the board from another. The shippers are always for lower rates; the employés are always for higher wages. If the management is always a counterweight, it is not sufficiently influential to keep a balance, as experience has demonstrated. It is almost always defeated, and the rate decisions and wage decisions thus come into collision in the end.

This is a highly unsatisfactory system, which does and must continue to make trouble. No industry could endure it and prosper, and if we wish to move any nearer to peace in transportation we must unify regulation to conform to the full scope of the economic, financial, and political problem of regulation.

The objection is made that the commission is already overloaded with work. We do not see that such an objection would apply under proper system and delegation of authority. The way to meet the problem is by creating an efficient auxiliary organization which should be efficient and large enough to deal finally with subordinate questions and in large matters to amass and digest evidence, so that the commission proper would be relieved of the great mass of work which now crushes it and left free to pass upon only important questions of principle and policy.

Our present system is inadequate and trouble making. We cannot afford to let it remain so.

Editorial of the Day

HOW LONG, ILLINOIS?

[Philadelphia Public Ledger.]

On Thursday, June 22, in a strip of timber half way between Marion and Herrin, in Williamson county, Ill., nineteen nonunion workers were shot and stabbed to death by a mob of striking miners. Since that day "Herrin" has been a synonym for union savagery and a symbol of bloody and defiant lawlessness. County officials failed to protect these victims. The state failed. Herrin and Williamson county remain defiant and unrepentant. Not an arrest has been made.

Illinois has made no move to wreak legal vengeance on these murderers. The authority of a great state seems to have stopped at the borders of another "Bloody Williamson county." Its writs run not in Herrin, or Marion, or Christopher, or Zeigler. The sheriff who failed to act remains in office. The attorney general of Illinois offered a "reward of $1,000" for evidence sufficient to convict. The state's attorney of Williamson county admits his helplessness. No formal investigation is under way.

Forty days have come and gone since outsiders came into Williamson county, helped gather the dead and the wounded, and saw the victims buried in unmarked graves of the Potter's field. Nothing has happened. The miners loaf about the streets or go fishing in the Big Muddy. The official silence remains unbroken.

The nation has a right to know from Illinois whether or not she proposes to let these murderers go unwhipped by justice. Has Illinois abdicated in "Egypt" and surrendered her sovereignty to the United Mine Workers of America and its locals in Franklin and Williamson counties? Is Springfield cowed by Herrin? How long, Illinois?

DIFFERENT IDEAS.

Hiram Meadows was an old fashioned farmer. He firmly believed in that quaint and wornout saying, "Early to bed, early to——" How does the rest of it go? He couldn't get along at all with the modern type of farm hand. So, after thinking matters over, Hiram decided to reform. After many trials he secured a strapping big fellow and resolved to keep that hand if humanly possible. Accordingly, on the first morning he waited till 4 o'clock before sounding the breakfast call.

"Get out of there quick if you want anything to eat."

"Thanks very much," growled the gem. "But I never eat anything just before going to sleep."—Kansas City Star.

DANGERS OF WEANING.

On a series of 1,000 babies studied 89 were weaned before they were 2 weeks old, and 370 before they were 3 months old.

Whenever a mother weans her baby before it is 9 months old she increases her troubles and lessens the chance of her baby for health and life.

Six hundred were weaned before they were 9 months old. While breast feeding between 3 and 9 months of age is less important than breast feeding at the earlier ages, it is still important, and the statement as to the increase of trouble and risk still holds true.

And the reasons given for weaning. How foolish they are!

Note: Insufficient milk, 69; baby not gaining, 25; poor milk, 25; milk dried up, 18; bad stools, 20, and a lot more of far less consequence.

Let us examine these.

Suppose the mother is not giving enough milk; the remedy is to increase the supply, or to give some diluted cow's milk after nursing. The baby should not be weaned. To increase the milk supply, lengthen the intervals between nursings, that the mother may get more rest and sleep. Put the baby to the breast at regular times. See that he empties both breasts at nursing or else pump them empty. See that the mother does not worry.

That and a fair amount of staple, common sense food will cause practically every mother to have plenty of milk.

But even if there is not quite enough, as shown by careful weighing of the naked baby before and after nursing, what is the remedy? Fix a bottle and give the baby enough food to supply the deficiency.

When a baby has bad stools, what is the remedy? In the first place, it is rarely good judgment to wean a baby because the mother's milk seems to disagree, as shown by green stools, loose bowels, a little mucus. The chances are three to one that the bowel trouble will get worse after weaning. Ask the mothers who have tried it.

In the discussion of Dr. Detrich's paper Drs. Baxter, Abt, and Mulherin were agreed that a little bowel disturbance in a breast fed baby is of minor importance and does not call for weaning.

One of the advantages of the four hour interval between nursing is that it adds so much to the convenience of breast feeding that fewer mothers decide to wean early. Dr. Abt was disposed to allow one substitute feeding during the day after the baby got to be 4 months old, especially if the mother wanted or needed to get away from home for a few hours.

Others disagreed with him, the principal reason being that when given an inch we are disposed to take an ell—one bottle a day was apt to lead to two before very long. And all agreed that two or more bottles a day was nothing more than setting the stage for weaning.

If the breasts are well stimulated by nursing about once every four hours during the day the milk will come, but interrupt this for eight or twelve hours and the supply lessens.

PROBABLY NOT FUR.

T. P. M. writes: "I am in perfectly good health, but my urine is milk color at times.

"Can you tell me if it is serious, and the cause?"

REPLY.

Since you mention no other symptom, it is probable that the milkiness is not due to pus. If it only develops after the urine stands it is probably due to alkalinity. If so, drink more water and eat more meat and milk.

If you are very nervous it may be due to excess of phosphates. It is not probable that the condition is serious.

HER CRACKING BONES.

Cracker writes: "1. Is it harmful to take hot water baths when menstruating if not accustomed to doing so?

"2. If you are in the habit of hearing your bones crack all the time, is it any sign of sickness or danger?"

REPLY.

1. No.

2. It means that you are not 100 per cent, but beyond that it means nothing.

You ought to be able to creak and crack to a full old age.

FEW POISONOUS SNAKES.

Mrs. W. writes: "As I expect to go to the woods for the summer with my children, I am writing to ask you to print an article on first aid for snake bites."

REPLY.

Very few snakes bite a person if they can avoid it. There are very few poisonous snakes.

If you have reason to think you have been bitten by a poisonous snake, suck the wound at once. Enlarge the tooth pricks, if necessary, to suck out the poison.

Spit out the poison sucked into the mouth, though there is not great danger if you swallow some of it.

A handkerchief tied tightly around the arm or leg will slow up the absorption of the poison somewhat and increase the effectiveness of sucking slightly.

If you have any antivenom available, have it used by hypodermic.

If suffering from fright apply heat externally.

For shock use aromatic spirits of ammonia 30 minims diluted with water.

CHILDBIRTH DANGERS.

Mrs. J. M. writes: "I am 17 and married. I would like to know the dangers of childbirth in one so young."

REPLY.

Most of the first children born 100 years ago were born to mothers 17 years old or not much older.

The death rate of mothers 17 to 20 is slightly greater than that of mothers at age 25, but the difference is not great.

FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

The home service section, American Red Cross, 58 East Washington street, is seeking James J. Carroll, J. B. McLaughlin, and Joseph Havel, who served in the Marine corps at San Domingo in the same outfit with Robert John Johannott.

AUSTRALIAN ESTATE.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 12.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—An uncle of mine in Australia died intestate. The next of kin are myself and brother, children of the deceased's full sister, and a half-brother, who lives in Ireland. What would be my share and would the fact that I am an American citizen make any difference if the estate were administered in Australia? J. A. C.

As to the personality, it depends on the law of that part of Australia in which he resided. As to the realty, depends on the law of the jurisdiction in which it is located. We suggest that you write to the administrator. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ALLEY CLEANED.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[Friend of the People.]—I wish you would please lend your influence toward cleaning up the alley in the rear of the 4000 block of North Paulina street. It is in a frightful condition and should be cleaned at once. F. E. F.

This entire alley has been thoroughly cleaned. THOMAS H. BYRNE, Superintendent of Streets.

LETTER BOX ADVERTISING.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please advise me if it is against the law or not to put circular letters or advertising matter into the mail boxes at private homes. I mean having a person go around and distribute them that way. N. F.

We find no legal prohibition. If you will write to the advertiser that such conduct deters rather than encourages you to give him your trade, and will get others to write in the same vein, you will be using the most effective argument against the practice.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

FOILING HOLDUPS.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[Friend of the People.]—What steps must be taken to have the tall weeds cut at the corner of 108th and Forest avenue? Two attacks on people have been made recently by persons who can hide in the weeds. We had to make complaint about this last year, but nothing was done. R. J. T.

The weeds referred to have been cut.
THOMAS H. BYRNE, Superintendent of Streets.

OBJECTS TO IMPROVEMENT OF HOME.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Has the landlord the right to enter my apartment for the purpose of laying new floors and installing electric lights? I am satisfied with the apartment as it is, and such improvement would greatly inconvenience me. The floors are of soft wood, but in good condition. My lease reads that the landlord can enter to make necessary repairs. Are such repairs necessary? The lease expires May 1, 1923.

If the building is sold does the new owner have to recognize the lease I have from the present owner? C. A. C.

The "necessity" of the repairs depends on the condition of the present floor. You are in a better position than we are to say whether these repairs are necessary. It seems probable that he is not entitled to enter.

If the building is sold, your present lease is still valid.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ABLE-BODIED PARENTS.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Is there a law which compels a child to support a parent who is not earning a livelihood? If so, and the parent is in good health but not working, is the law the same? H. M.

The child is not liable, if the parent is able to support himself.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ROCK CANDY.

Aug. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I purchased yesterday a 10 cent bar of candy and in eating it I broke off part of a tooth because there was a piece of stone in the candy about the size of a bean. I should like to know if the candy company could be held for damages? F. J. G.

The modern tendency is to hold the manufacturer liable, especially if the facts are such as to indicate negligence, but the question is close enough so that the litigation would probably cost you more than you could recover. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

ALABAMA REAL ESTATE.

Evanston, Ill., Aug. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Must I, a resident of Illinois, procure a license or permit to sell and exchange real estate in Alabama? If so, where must I make application? P. J. L.

Although the point is open to question, we incline to the opinion that a single transaction would not subject you to the tax specified in the Alabama 1915 statute.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

VIOLATES MICHIGAN LAWS

Chicago, Aug. 15.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—A corporation doing business in Michigan shows a deficit and no surplus on their balance sheet, and yet they mail me a check for a 3 per cent dividend. Is that not unlawful in Michigan? J. R. S.

Yes, under section 3 of the Michigan corporation law.
TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

GOES BANKRUPT.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—If I have an article patented and incorporate a company to manufacture this article, and then the organization goes bankrupt, can they take away the patent from this corporation? L. A.

Presumably the patent would be assigned to the corporation. In the ordinary case it could not be taken back and sold as one of your assets in connection with your individual bankruptcy.

MEMORY TESTS

1. What territories was Illinois a part of before statehood? Under the early French it was known as the Illinois country with no definite limits. When ceded to the English in 1763, it was known as the Northwest territory. It came to the United States under that name in 1783. In 1800 it was a part of the Indiana territory. In 1809 it was called Illinois territory. In 1818 its limits were defined. The line was drawn just to the south of Lake Michigan. This put Chicago and Fort Dearborn in Wisconsin. The far seeing Illinois men saw the benefits of the lake and succeeded in having the northern line moved up seventy miles.

2. What is the game of draughts more commonly called? Checkers.

3. Who ceded Alabama to the United States? The Choctaw Indians, on Jan. 3, 1786.

4. What foreign country offered mediation between the United States and the confederacy? France, Jan. 3, 1863.

5. What is a ghat? In India, a landing place, with stairs descending to a river for purposes of bathing. A burning ghat is the level space, sometimes inclosed, at the head of a ghat, where the Hindus cremate their dead.

THE TROUBLE IS THAT IT'S ALMOST ALL ENTRANCE.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—Would suggest you adopt the style of architecture used in the building La Bourse, Paris. This is a very imposing edifice, especially the entrance.

On the top have a representation of the earth with the idea that here they could get the news from all parts of the earth. CHARLES R. MOREY.

USE CANADA TO PAY WAR DEBTS.

Quincy, Ill., Aug. 7.—In your last Friday editorial you discuss settlement of the war debts. When the European conflict first started, back in 1914, plans were put into effect to involve us, even though we were too proud to fight. The integrity of Belgium, France, and Great Britain could not have been preserved if the United States had not thrown its strength into the conflict during the "Hurry! Hurry!" period of the last year of the war. Chateau Thierry was put on the map in big letters by the American troops, and it was there that the Germans first began to pack up their duds to go home. It was dangerous for the Germans to remain anywhere in France after that time.

One could not help marvel during the period that drew us into the war, that our press or public men did not realise the importance of getting all American possessions away from Great Britain, France, and other imperial holders. They should have released the Bahamas, the Bermudas, Jamaica, Trinidad, Honduras, Guiana, and every other possession still held to the North American and South American states, to which they rightfully belong. All of these places are but outposts from which to send forces to blow up our expensive works at Panama, whenever the least provocation offers the excuse.

We should not be duped into accepting some unimportant islands in settlement of the entire debts, on the theory that they are worth big money to us, as our bargain in the Danish West Indies case made us laughing stock in the world's diplomatic circles.

Great Britain is in good position to pay us all she owes us, and we should see that she does so. If the money is not forthcoming, we should seize such of her property as is available and apply it toward the debts. Back in 1776 such well known Americans as Montgomery, Arnold, and others thought that Canada had common cause to join in the revolution. Such names as Nova Scotia, Montreal, Quebec, etc., suggest that Great Britain has no just claims to this vast territory north of us, except what she has obtained through force of arms, which is the way she has built up all of her empire.

As great an American as George Washington wanted the Canadians to sever their connections with Great Britain, but a powerful army and navy at Halifax prevented it. We could do much more for Canada and they could do much more for us, if they could come under our control outright.

The wealth of nations, like that of individuals, consists of two kinds, personal and real. If there is not money enough to settle the obligations, why not apply some of the real estate?

SCHUYLER C. PIGOTT.

"GREENWICH VILLAGE" IS NO LONGER A PLACE, BUT AN ADJECTIVE.

New York, Aug. 7.—Our attention has just been called to a news item in your issue of July 19 in which you say that Charles Garland's fund is "to fall into the hands of a group of Greenwich Village liberal thinkers, whose views of life, including matrimony, are shared by the young unwilling-to-be-millionaire."

Since that statement is an obvious error and does not correctly characterize the group to which Mr. Garland has given his money, we ask you to publish this correction.

Mr. Garland's views on matrimony are his personal concern and have nothing to do with the disposition of his money. The committee which has taken the gift is not concerned with Mr. Garland's personal views and does not as a group share them. It is a bit amusing to find three Chicagoans on the committee and two ministers identified as "Greenwich Villagers." Only one in the group of twelve so characterized lives in or near "the Village."

The dispatch which you printed was an early garbled report which got out before any official announcement was made, and on that ground your correspondent may be perhaps excused for his characterization of such citizens of Chicago as Prof. Robert Morse Lovett, Mary E. McDowell, and William T. Foster. ROGER BALDWIN, Secretary.

"COUNTY FAIR" SPORTSMANSHIP.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—Went out to the "County Fair" the other day, and while there saw the boat races. Were you there, and did you notice, in the championship event, that Miss Chicago would not play unless they would let her get a flying start on the rest of the entries?

That was poor sportsmanship, and rude before her own home folks, too. And then did you notice how Miss America beat the life out of her? Yes, sir, such a holy show of her, and right in front of the grand stand, every time she came by. And then in the last lap she, Miss America, got tired of waiting and put under way. Did you notice it? Wasn't it funny, though?

Then what in the devil do you mean by printing in your columns that Miss Chicago "was nosed out" by Miss America?

Out in my country when we entertain visitors we don't hog the most comfortable chairs. We give them to the visitors, and when we have a sporting event the visitors don't have to take the leavings. We see to it that they get an even break. That's our idea of both hospitality and sportsmanship.

I wonder if Miss Chicago ever intends to go to Detroit or any other city to race, and what kind of hospitality she will expect to get when she is the visitor.

F. J. BOYLAN.

REACTION TO BIG FOUR STRIKES.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 12.—Well, I see the so-called Big Four will strike because the railroad companies are using armed guards to protect their property and employés against the attacks of hoodlums and worse.

Which reminds me that the National Protective Association of Amalgamated Burglars have held an open meeting and passed strong resolutions protesting against the carrying of firearms by the police. J. B. COTEREAU.

"THE STATE IS SOVEREIGN."

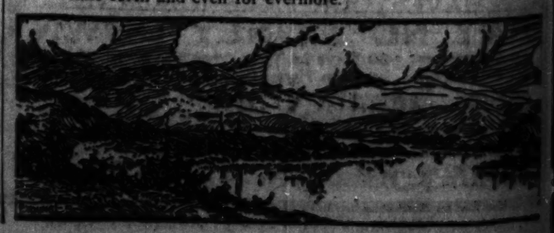
Chicago, Aug. 14.—As the writer understands it, the Big Four is not allowed to go out on any sympathetic strike. Now that the railroads seem to be winning the shopmen's strike the Big Four tries to walk out on the flimsy excuse that their lives are endangered by the troops which the state government has stationed at the shops to guard property. Now where does the Big Four get the idea that they can tell the state what to do?

As for the shopmen, if the railroads can get men to work for their price all well and good, and if the shopmen must have more money than the railroads can afford to pay them let them find other jobs with the necessary remuneration. In my opinion, it isn't for labor to dictate what any industry should pay, but it is labor's right to look for a better job and to study and fit itself for a job with more pay. H. J. G.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

PSALM CXXI.

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.
My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth.
He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; He that keepeth thee will not slumber.
Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.
The Lord is thy keeper; the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand.
The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.
The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; He shall preserve thy soul.
The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth and even for evermore.



NOT MISS PFAFF'S FIRST OUTBURST, PATRONESS SAYS

'Temperament' Shown in Debut Two Years Ago.

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

Some new light was thrown yesterday on the "temperament" of Miss Rosemary Pfaff, the 18 year old lyric Cinderella who recently hurled soprano notes at her Chicago patronnesses declaring she was tired of being "patronized by patronnesses." She implied they had cut her allowance from $250 to $125 a month and also charged she had been forced to wear discarded gowns of her Chicago benefactors.

Among the latter are Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, 1000 Lake Shore drive; Mrs. Archibald E. Freer, 1430 Lake Shore drive, and Mrs. Louis Yager, 200 Forest avenue, Oak Park, treasurer, president and secretary, respectively, of the Opera in Our Language foundation; and Miss Irena Pfaff, 1731 Sheridan road, head of the Silver Mirror, 215 West Randolph street.

Tells of Temper Display.

Mrs. Louis Yager told yesterday of the young woman's first display of artistic temper. She said it occurred two years ago when Miss Pfaff made her debut in Oak Park under the auspices of Belle Watson Melville, for which she was paid $500.

"Miss Pfaff is young, beautiful, and gifted," Mrs. Yager stated at that time, "and we do not wish her to go the way many of our American girls are obliged to go to win recognition in foreign countries as artists. We are anxious that she should be a protégé of our organization."

This statement incensed Rosemary and her mother and father, the latter said to be an Indiana butcher, who believed, according to Chicago members of the organization, that greater laurels awaited the girl through a "publicity" campaign. It is claimed it was in carrying out this plan that the young woman's statements recently were made.

Makes Second Debut.

According to Mrs. Mary Delaney Fisher, member of the board of directors of the Illinois Woman's Athletic club, the girl made her second debut last January at a concert the club gave at the Drake hotel.

At this concert Miss Pfaff, then in the chorus of a Chicago theatrical production, interested Miss Frieder, a friend in need to many young women musicians and artists. She agreed to pay the girl $5,000 a year. Later, when the Opera in Our Language foundation asked to contribute to her studies, Miss Frieder agreed to give anonymously $125 a month, the foundation to furnish a like amount.

Miss Pfaff Objects.

Miss Pfaff objected when the association check was withdrawn after she had refused to pursue her studies in Chicago, awaiting the return of Mme. Schoen-Rene, now in Europe, and, according to the girl's own statement, "the only reason for going to New York."

"These women have done everything that they agreed to do," Miss Frieder said. "Miss Pfaff's story about having to wear castoff clothing is very distorted. And as for her having been asked to sing for Mrs. McCormick and Mrs. Freer, it is quite natural that they should want to find out the progress she was making."

But even a woman can turn the other cheek, and sometimes a fairy godmother will send another check to an ungrateful protégé. So Miss Frieder will continue to send the monthly allowance of $125 until November.

"I am bitterly disappointed in the whole affair," said Miss Frieder. "But I hope by November things will have been adjusted and Miss Pfaff will realize how much we are trying to help her."

LOSES $1,000 BILL.

Jacob Kraut, 5028 Winthrop avenue, drew a $1,000 bill yesterday from the bank. When he looked for it in his pocket upon arriving home, it was not there. The money was sent to his aunt, Mrs. Nellie Bloch.

TEMPER IN ART

Mrs. Louis Yager, secretary of Opera in Our Language Foundation, who tells of previous temperamental outburst by Miss Rosemary Pfaff, 18 year old singer, who recently assailed her patronesses.

Samuel N. Crawford, member of the firm of R. N. Crawford & Co., Insurance Exchange building, Chicago, died Friday afternoon after a short illness.

SAMUEL N. CRAWFORD.

Mr. Crawford was born Oct. 28, 1863, in Geneva, Ill. In 1893 he became office manager for Secor Cunningham insurance agency on La Salle street. He later became connected with Rogers & Rollo, and from there he entered the employ of Fred S. James & Co. After returning to Rogers & Rollo in 1903, he again went to Fred S. James & Co. in 1905, and became a member of that firm in 1907. In May, 1922, Mr. Crawford left Fred S. James & Co. to become connected with his son in the firm of R. N. Crawford & Co.

During Mr. Crawford's insurance career he was well known to the large packing industries of Chicago and to a great many members of the Board of Trade. He was a member of the Chicago Athletic association, Insurance club and Chicago board of underwriters.

Mr. Crawford leaves a widow, Dollie Crawford, and a son, Russell N. Crawford, and three sisters living in Detroit.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a. m. Monday at the residence of his son, 451 Aldine avenue.

FRUIT ON SALE AT PIER MONDAY AT LOW PRICES

Poole Makes Deal with Michigan Growers.

After a four-day personal investigation of the bumper Michigan fruit crop, Russell J. Poole, city costs expert, returned to Chicago yesterday and announced plans to sell fruit direct to the public at wholesale prices.

The first sale, consisting of a boatload of apples, peaches, pears, plums, and grapes from Berrien county, Michigan, will open on the municipal pier at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. Through arrangements with the railroads and large industrial concerns, carloads of fruit are to be set out on switch tracks at the Western Electric company and Pullman company plants and in the vicinity of the plants of other large employers of labor.

"Ad. Kaindl and I found the trees bending with fruit," Mr. Poole said. "After addressing the members of five fruit growers' associations, I found these men dissatisfied with conditions and ready in many intances to let their crop rot on the trees or the ground.

Get Little for Crop.

"The Berrien county fruit men estimate that their crop alone is worth $14,000,000. Under present conditions they are getting as little as from five to twenty cents a bushel net for their fruit. The high freight rates, cost of picking and packing accounts for this.

"The fruit growers sent a committee to Chicago and traced their fruit from South Water street, where it was being sold as low as $1 a bushel to the hands of the consumers who, because the many hands through which the fruit passes, were paying as high as $4 and $5 a bushel for it.

"One of the chief reasons for these high prices and the low return to the grower is the fact that, owing to the big crop, a combination of alley peddlers has sprung up. These men refuse to bid for a boatload of fruit until it is about to spoil. Then they buy it at a song and sell it to the public, though it is already beginning to decompose, at profiteering prices."

Ready to Ship 2,000 Cars.

The Michigan growers are ready to ship 2,000 cars of fruit to Chicago by boat and railroad if the sales at the municipal pier are well patronized, Mr. Poole said. The food expert, under the agreement with the growers, will fix the price for the fruit each day, setting it to correspond to the price of fruit on South Water street. A committee of growers will accompany each shipment and will receive all money taken for the fruit, Mr. Poole asserted.

The fruit will sell on the pier at from 90c to $1.75 a bushel, Mr. Poole estimated. The exact price which the growers are to be permitted to charge will be posted at the pier tomorrow.

Litigation, growing out of the campaign in 1917 against gamblers and liquor law violators in the western suburbs, was begun in the Circuit court yesterday by Attorney Myer J. Stein to recover $1,200, alleged to be due him as fees from the West Suburban Law and Order Protective league for prosecuting the cases.

Mr. Stein charges that the reformers have paid him but $60.

RED OGRE STIRS RICH GERMANS TO SATISFY FRANCE

Factories May Give 25% of Stock to French.

BY OTIS SWIFT.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—While the newspapers and the ordinary German citizen unite in the bitterest denunciation of the French policy as the cause of Germany's collapse, big business interests are fearful that economic prostration will result in bolshevism. Today they are discussing direct conciliatory negotiations and voluntary economic concessions to France in an attempt to solve the problem which thirteen world conferences fruitlessly tackled.

Despite the fact that basic hatred for France makes overtures to Paris the last alternative, German leaders are beginning to believe this is better than the inevitable crash which will ensue unless adjustment is reached.

Would Give French Stock.

Arnold Rechberg, industrial magnate, today suggested that as capitalization of German industries has not kept pace with the mark in depreciation, and the present market value of industrial assets is far greater than the stock extant, it would be possible for all German industries to increase their stock 25 per cent, turning this over to the reparations commission, whereof France would get 52 per cent.

He points out that the 12½ per cent interest which France would thus get, would not enable her to dominate, but would settle the reparations question and allow industry to reestablish itself.

The government is busy preparing statistics to present to the reparations commission's representatives on Tuesday. Officials declare the Berlin archives will prove Germany's inability to pay in gold. The mark slumped 25 per cent more today, reaching 1,250 to $1.

May Reduce Beer Supply.

BERLIN, Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The imperial economic council appointed a committee today to formulate proposals for the alleviation of the present economic and financial stringency of Germany.

Dr. Hirsch, undersecretary in the ministry of economics, recommended considerable reduction in consumption and the adoption of measures to increase production. He proposed that there be a great restriction or even a complete prohibition of tobacco imports, which in the first six months of 1922 exceeded in amount even the pre-war figures. Dr. Hirsch expressed the view there should be restrictions on the manufacture and importation of alcohol, wines, fruit, coffee, beer, chocolate, perfumes, furs, carpets, cloth, and other luxuries.

The undersecretary also suggested higher taxation on profits from speculation in foreign currency. He advocated the raising of a small loan abroad, in order to spread the payments due on pre-waf debts to the allies over a longer period.

Seek Temporary Solution.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The departure of the reparations mission for Berlin tonight marked the beginning of the final effort of the reparations commission to find a temporary solution of the German indemnity problem acceptable to both French and British public opinion and thereby prevent the threatened independent action by France, with a consequent breaking up of the entente.

Sir John Bradbury, British member of the commission, and his associates have an appointment to see Chancellor Wirth Monday morning.

French official circles have renewed with increased vigor the French plan for a comprehensive settlement which Premier Poincare would have presented at London but for the refusal of Mr. Lloyd George to permit discussion of the allied debts. The reparations commission is being unofficially urged to take up the plan.

Would Cut Reparations.

Briefly, the scheme provides for a reduction of the interest bearing reparations to 50,000,000,000 gold marks, including both cash and merchandise, and the gradual cancellation of the remainder of the 132,000,000,000 marks indemnity.

This 82,000,000,000 gold marks would be canceled proportionately as the 50,000,000,000 are paid by Germany and as the interallied debts are canceled. The plan leaves the United States claims in abeyance for adjustment later, the point being made that the allied debts to the United States cannot at this time be considered with the general reparations question. The reparations commission would welcome the opportunity to settle the question in such a broad way, but it is realized that the governments would have to give the commission special authority to proceed with such plans. Both the French and British officials regard some general settlement such as the French proposal inevitable, but impossible at the present time.

The purpose therefore of the commission is to find a temporary compromise which would bridge the interval between now and November and December, but by which time it is expected the allies will be ready formally to consider cancellation of debts and reduction of indemnity.

POLES FEAR RED HORDES COVET U. S FOOD STOCKS

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Poland lives in constant fear of an invasion and seizure by the red army of the enormous supplies of the American Relief administration concentrated along the border. This statement was made at the Polish legation today in explanation of the reported decision of Poland to increase her armed men from 250,000 to 300,000.

The American Relief administration, it was divulged by the legation for the first time today, was requested by Poland, when the soviet government was making warlike gestures toward that country during the parleys at Genoa, to remove a part of the huge quantities of food stored in Russia for famine relief.

The relief administration, it was pointed out by the Poles, had enough food stored in Russia to feed 11,000,000 civilians for three months, and that food, if seized by the bolshevists, would maintain the whole red army, recruited to a strength of 2,000,000 men, for nearly two years.

Poland's request was granted, at least in part, and a considerable part of the stores were diverted to points in Poland for better protection and to remove temptation from the bolshevists.

British Deny Separate Negotiations with Russia

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 19.—The foreign office today declared the soviet government misinterpreted the purpose of queries by Mr. Hodgen, chief of the British commercial mission in Moscow, which the soviets took as reopening financial negotiations closed at The Hague, on behalf of Great Britain. The purpose of the queries was to secure information for British industrialists who wish to do business with Russia, it was stated.

GERMANY'S RICH SPEND FREELY; LABORERS WANT

German working girls are forced to labor a month to earn sufficient to buy a pair of stockings—they cost 300 marks a pair—while the wealthy classes are spending money with the abandon of the days that marked Germany's most prosperous period.

This is the eyewitness report brought back by Mrs. Frank Schaedler, 301 Sheridan road, Wilmette, former leader in the work of the German War Relief association and for several months an observer abroad.

"One cannot help but contrast the marked divergence in the attitude of the so-called wealthy and the laboring classes in Germany," she said last night. "While the rich are living in startling luxury, seemingly unaffected by the disorganization of industry caused by the war, the working folk are feeling the pinch of a poverty that is terrible.

Living Costs Are High.

"The value of the mark sinks lower and lower. Currency daily becomes less stable. Cost of living is high. Necessities of life are almost without the reach of the laborer; hours of work are long and the pay is low.

"Every one in the families of the middle class and the poor is forced to work to keep the family out of debt. Old women—some of them 80 years old—are working at trades in order that they may buy foodstuffs and clothes.

"Parents must put their children to work. Higher education for the masses seems out of the question.

"The war has produced a new Germany, a poor Germany, a Germany of despondency and poverty."

Urges Currency Stabilization.

This is the view of the nation which Mrs. Schaedler received from her observations in the country. The only hope for the nation, she asserts, lies in the stabilization of currency through a refunding of the reparations debts. Without such the present government faces collapse within six months, she says.

Mrs. Schaedler is now heading the Women's Lyceum club of Chicago. An outgrowth of the German War Relief association, it purposes tocarry on the work of relieving in every way the suffering and want of the children of Germany.

ONE MEAL A DAY FULL DAY'S WAGE FOR THE RUSSIANS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 19.—According to figures received by the American Relief association in London from Moscow, 10,000,000 persons are now receiving a daily American ration. Definite reconstruction work is now being done in Russia by the American Relief association.

Walter Bell, district supervisor, is now employing 2,142 laborers at a salary of one meal daily to do public work of lasting value, including the building of drainage canals, roads, bridges, schools, and drinking fountains.

JUSTICE DIVES UNDER BENCH TO ESCAPE RUCKUS

Waukegan, Ill., Aug. 19.—After James Duffy, police magistrate at Highland Park, had fined an Italian $31 for beating an enemy today, there still was vengeance in the heart of the defendant. As he started toward the door, he grabbed his former victim by the throat and hurled him to the floor. Chief Maroney stopped the battle and thrust the Italian back into a cell. Then the police started to look for Magistrate Duffy, who had disappeared.

"Is everything all right?" came a voice from under the judge's bench. Then emerged a pair of legs, then a body, and finally Judge Duffy righted himself.

"What'll we do with this bird, now that we've arrested him again?" he asked Chief Maroney.

ROBERT W. ROSS, 'HEIR TO $50,000,' JUST 'WAIF' AGAIN

Law Returns Child to Orphanage.

Snatched by the law from a $50,000 estate promised him by his foster parents, and for nine years the object of a nation-wide search, Robert William Ross, 10 years old, was yesterday returned by Judge Timothy D. Hurley to St. Vincent's Orphan asylum, where he began life as a foundling.

ROBT. W. ROSS.

Evidence of two alleged kidnapings and an alleged fraudulent adoption of the boy in San Francisco by Mrs. Parmelia Ross was introduced during the four days' argument before Judge Hurley on the foster mother's petition for a writ of habeas corpus to force the local institution to return the boy to her.

Found on Doorstep.

When but a day old, the boy was found abandoned on the doorstep of the Guardian Angels Home in Joliet, and sent to St. Vincent's asylum in Chicago. In an effort to find a suitable home for the baby, the latter institution allowed Mrs. Ethel Hand to take the boy on "probation."

Becoming estranged from her husband, Mrs. Hand, it was alleged by Attorneys William L. Sullivan and Harry Busch, counsel for St. Vincent's asylum, fled with the boy to the home of her parents in San Francisco. No authority having been given by them for taking the boy to California, the asylum officials charged that Mrs. Hand "kidnaped" him.

Mrs. Hand's mother, Mrs. Permelia Ross, wife of Police Captain William Ross of San Francisco, became attached to the baby and several months later adopted him in a proceeding before a California court. Efforts of St. Vincent asylum officials to trace the child through the San Francisco police were fruitless, it was charged, because requests for information, handled through Capt. Ross' office, brought answers that no such child could be found.

Child Is Surrendered.

Finally, discovering his whereabouts, the asylum sent its investigator, Miss Gertrude Healy, to San Francisco to bring the boy home. She filed habeas corpus proceedings, which were dropped when Mrs. Ross surrendered the boy. Mrs. Ross in the hearing yesterday declared that Miss Healy obtained custody of the child through fraud and charged that she had virtually kidnaped him.

Judge Hurley upheld the contention of Attorney Sullivan that adoption of the boy by Mrs. Ross was illegal, because Mrs. Hand, not having been appointed legal guardian, had no authority to take the child from the state nor to give him for adoption to Mrs. Ross.

SEEKS FORTUNE LEFT BY FATHER, TITANIC VICTIM

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—One of the passengers on the Cunarder Aquitania from Southampton and Cherbourg who landed tonight was Capt. George Camp Douglas of the British royal artillery, who said he had come here to claim $250,000 as his share of the estate left to him by his father, Walter D. Douglas, an official of the Quaker Oats company of Minnesota, who was drowned on the Titanic ten years ago.

Mr. Douglas' will contained a proviso which stated that the two sons should for ten years earn at least $2,500 a year, and then the $500,000 left by their father should be divided equally between them.

"My brother, E. Bruce Douglas," said the captain, "has received his share, and I am on my way to see the trustees in Minneapolis and explain that my service during the war has kept me from earning the stipulated sum of $2,500 a year.

"My brother served in the American army and received much higher pay. Besides, his term of service was much shorter, which gave him ample time to earn more money."

Shopping at Piggly Wiggly a Charming Adventure

"Southern Woman's Magazine"

Shopping in Piggly Wiggly fashion is a most charming sort of an adventure.

You go in by way of a turnstile and follow the obvious and open way that winds back and forth through spotless aisles.

Here are canned meats, pickles and preserves, jams and jellies, fresh vegetables and fruits, soap and cleansing powders, each after its kind, crackers, cakes and breads, mammoth pantry you might call it, with anything and everything that a housekeeper most needs, all open for your selection, ready and waiting to be gathered up by you as you pass.

When you have finished you are led by the appointed way to the checking counter, where the contents of your basket are checked, and your purchases are put into a bag for you.

And at the next stop you pay for your marketing and then go out through a second turnstile, having done your shopping with all possible ease and having replenished your larder with standard foods of your own selection and at a very appreciable saving on every separate purchase.

OUTER HARBOR SOLUTION OF ONE TRAFFIC CHECK

Boatmen, Too, Chafe at Bridge Delays.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

Chicago pays something more than $700,000 a year for the privilege of watching loop bridges over the Chicago river go up and down. Actual cost of traffic delays occasioned by this rhythmic variation of the city's championship transportation tangle soon would pay for the construction of an adequate outer harbor, according to authorities of the shipping and transportation interests.

At the magnificent Michigan avenue link bridge, crack span of the Chicago river system, more than 10,000,000 vehicles were subject to the whims of the river last year, the latest traffic count shows. Of these, city experts estimate, an average of 350 were delayed every time the bridge was raised, and it opened exactly 4,206 times. Practice and coöperation between river traffic, bridge tenders, and traffic police cut the delay to an average of three minutes on each swing, incidentally marking up a world's record for bridge handling.

"Eight Years Lost at River."

Busy statisticians, possessed of the facts as to vehicle numbers and bridge swing, wore down the visible pencil supply yesterday in figuring the theoretical cost to traffic thus: 4,206 bridge swings at three minutes a swing piled up 210.3 hours of waiting at the bridge during the year for the 350 vehicles which happened to be caught at each swing. The traffic then lost 73,500 hours, or more than eight years at the river banks.

The cost of this eight year wait is problematical, but transportation men believe that the time of a Chicago vehicle and its occupants is worth at least $2 an hour. The cost is about $4 an hour for rented vehicles. At $2 an hour the waiting vehicles piled up the neat little fortune of $147,000 in Michigan avenue alone. This, added to the delays at the thirteen remaining loop bridges, where waiting time and traffic is conservatively estimated at one-third of the Michigan avenue total, brings a grand total of $784,000 spent for Chicago's bridge pastime.

Further Relief Held Unlikely.

No further traffic relief may be expected from the bridge operation in Chicago. That science has reached human perfection, according to veterans of the city harbor master's office.

"By cutting down the time of bridge swings to an average of three minutes each Chicago has the fastest operating bridges in the world," declared J. A. Marston, acting chief of the bridge division. "This record is made possible by the high grade type of men employed on our bridges, the coöperation they receive from city policemen in clearing the bridges for action, and the general coöperation of Chicago drivers, who have learned that by stopping promptly at a bridge signal they help everybody to save time.

"We employ an average of three men to each swing bridge and six on the bascule structures. Twelve men are employed on the Michigan avenue bridge. The cost of these moving bridges averages about $5,000 a year. Some will run more, some less. The fixed bridges in Chicago cost practically nothing after their construction, but there is no possibility of a fixed bridge system for the city until either the deep waterway project is completed, an outer harbor built with rail lines connecting with it, or some such millennium in lakes navigation is brought about.

Shipping on Increase.

"Another thing: River shipping is not on the decrease. It is increasing steadily, and this year should break all records. The rail strike has, of course, added to the tonnage recently, but shippers are favoring lake traffic more and more, and it is becoming an increasingly vital link in Chicago's transportation system."

The outer harbor is a cherished dream, too, of old time pilots and thoughtful shippers. Bridges and the Chicago loop congestion is as much their problem as it is the city motorists'. Every boat schedule which includes the Chicago river in its calculations must eliminate four and one-half hours daily from its sailing time. The city ordinance closes all bridges during the traffic rush hours from 6:30 to 9 a. m. and 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. This delay has proved a real loss to river and lake shipping, even though the boats utilize the time in loading.

Thanks to Chicago bridges, the fastest time that has been made between the lake and Division street on the north branch of the river is two hours and twenty-five minutes.

Lake Harbor Solution.

"It does seem right peculiar on the face of it to handicap a city of three million people with a mote and drawbridges all down Main street," remarked Capt. Young of the Dunham Towing company, "but there seems no help for it without an outer harbor connected directly with the railroads. The outer belt drive, as planned, should eliminate some of the bridge delays for Chicago vehicles, but boats bringing goods to Chicago will have to take their bridge delays as best they can until such time as they can use a real lake harbor, instead of the river channel."

CUPID'S COURT MAY COME TO CHICAGO

Thomas B. Delker, head of the unique "Cupid's court" that has been established at Hammonton, N. J., is so well satisfied with its success in finding mates for 2,100 applicants that he proposes establishing a court in Chicago. The picture shows the judge and jury at Hammonton. Left to right, front row: Mrs. W. C. Baker, Mrs. A. R. E. Pointier, Mrs. Clyde Smith, Mrs. Helen Long Rogers, Harry P. Metella, James L. Donell, and E. H. White; back row: Thomas B. Delker, John B. Retired After 50 Years in U. S. Service; Hunts Job

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Frank Merritt, chief clerk in the accounting department of the New York navy yard, was retired today after almost fifty years of service for the government. He is 72 years old.

"What the dickens am I going to do?" he exclaimed. "As long as a fellow can work why should he give up? What shall I do? Lounge around the house? Not much! I intend to look for a job."

HOTEL MAN BUYS KENWOOD CLUB'S HOME, LANDMARK

Old South Side Group Sells Building.

BY AL CHASE.

Kenwood's oldest and most exclusive social organization, the Kenwood club, which has stood at the southwest corner of Lake Park avenue and East 47th street since the early nineties, has been sold to Charles M. Sommers, former owner of the St. James grill, once top the Majestic hotel, and owner of the Birchmont hotel, for $143,000. Mr. Sommers has not made any definite plans, but his purchase includes all the furnishings, and it is known he is contemplating opening an elaborate restaurant, probably with dancing.

CHARLES M. SOMMERS.

Although the contracts for the sale have been signed, Otto B. von Linde, associated wth Perry Ulrich, representing Mr. Sommers and Paul A. Hazard & Co., the sellers, the club's board of directors will not take official action on the transaction until tomorrow evening.

President Charles R. Holden admitted the deal already had divided the club into factions, some wanting the sale closed and a new home purchased, others believing the old building should be retained.

May Disband Club.

"It's too valuable for business purposes to hold," said Mr. Holden, "and we've been looking around Kenwood for some residential bargain to be used for a new home. We haven't found anything and the club may be disbanded."

The Kenwood club is like no other organization in Chicago. From the start its membership was made up of practically every one of social prominence in the city. And there were no "ladies' days"—wives and children of members used the club as freely and as often as the men.

Younger Set Quits.

For a good many years there was a waiting list of from 500 to 600, and it took five or six years to get in. Now there are only 110 active and 150 associate members. Most of the wealthy old-timers have moved north or died. The younger set spend more time at country clubs and do their dancing at hotels rather than at the now somewhat sedate and timeworn Kenwood.

Mr. Sommers will take possession on Nov. 1. The property fronts 200 feet on 47th and 160 feet on Lake Park avenue.

Claims Britain Will Agree to 12 Mile 'Volstead Limit'

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[United Press.]—Negotiations are under way between the United States and Great Britain to extend to twelve miles the limit in which vessels can be searched for liquor, Senator Sterling, South Dakota, told the senate today. Sterling, who recently introduced an amendment to the tariff bill which would extend the limit to twelve miles, today said he would not press the amendment pending the negotiations which are being carried on by Secretary of State Hughes.

Union Painter Missing Strangely Since Tuesday

FOOD FOR THOUGHT!

12 of the many features which makes this Chicago's most unusual restaurant:

You pay only for food:
Instead of paying "fancy" prices just to have food brought to your table you serve yourself and pay only for the food you eat plus the mere cost of preparing it. So you get big portions of the highest quality food at prices 40 to 60 per cent less than other good dining places must charge to include "service."

No charge for sharing portions:
Each food portion is more than an average portion and contrary to usual restaurant custom we make no extra charge for portions shared by two.

Children are really welcome:
This is the one Chicago dining place where the Children are really welcome. We have plenty of high chairs for them.

No mere cup of coffee:
You can't get a mere cup of coffee here. But for 10 cents (the price most dining places charge for a cup) we give you an individual pot (containing two cups) with plenty of real cream.

Eggs cooked in fresh creamery butter:
All eggs are cooked in fresh creamery butter to give a better flavor. Try them and see how much finer they taste. For breakfast you may have two fresh eggs and four strips of bacon for only 30 cents.

No "Cooking Butter" used:
Here no "cooking butter" is ever used for any purpose—not even in our kitchens. We buy only one quality of butter—the best.

We spend $25,000 yearly to purify and cool the air:
One of the finest and most complete ventilating systems ever installed provides this restaurant with "outdoor" air which is thoroughly washed, purified and cooled before it enters the room. It costs us $25,000 a year to operate this ventilating system but it means you can dine in comfort here no matter what the weather.

No annoying waits:
In spite of the tremendous number of people who dine here daily our capacity is so big and our facilities for cooking and handling food so perfect that even during the "rush" hours you are at your table with your food in far less time than required for service in most dining places. And there is always a table for you.

You see the food before you buy it:
Our "Bill of Fare" is the food itself. You see it before you buy it. You see just what you want to eat and get just what you see. All the uncertainty of selecting from a printed "Bill of Fare" is done away with.

TOWNSEND URGES WAR SUPPLIES BE SOLD TO STATES

Would Distribute Surplus at Small Cost.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—While the senate is awaiting the conference report on the tariff bill, Senator Townsend of Michigan will try to have the senate pass his bill providing for distribution among the states of surplus of war material, estimated at a value of $1,000,000,000.

Senator Townsend said today he believed that to give this material to the states at a cost of 15 per cent of its value, less the cost of transportation, as provided in the bill, the government will save money as compared to the existing plans for disposing of this material.

Will Save Money.

He believes that if the government can get 15 per cent of the value of this material from the states its distribution will be quickly made, while at the same time the government will be able to dispense with expensive sales organizations and advertising.

Senator Townsend argues that while small lots of this surplus material are being sold at public auction, and by other means, at nominal prices, it is being resold to the public at unreasonable profits. Also, he takes the stand that the slow disposition of this surplus may cause it to deteriorate, while at the same time the government is at tremendous expense in guarding and protecting it in warehouses.

Distributed by Population.

According to the bill, the material will be disposed of to the various states based upon their population. The cost of transportation as provided in the bill, is to be deducted by the states from the 15 per cent of its value paid to the government for such material. The distribution is to be made by the secretary of agriculture.

The bill further provides that the governors of the several states shall make requisition for such material within ix months after passage of the bill and that it shall be accepted by the states within six months of the date of requisition. This provision virtually gives each state a year in which to make requisition, receive and pay for the material bought.

CATHOLICS MAY RENEW WELFARE COUNCIL, RULING

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The order issued last February by the Consistorial Congregation in Rome, under the direct authority of the pope and the college of cardinals, suspending and forbidding all future meetings of the National Catholic Welfare council, has been revoked, it was learned today.

The council, organized in 1919 by Cardinal Gibbons, now dead, and other Roman Catholic prelates throughout the United States as a war measure, to discuss church and social problems and to maintain a national administrative committee and for publicity purposes, will be permitted to resume its annual meetings, held in September, but only under very definite rules and regulations, which have just been promulgated by the apostolic delegate, John Bonzano, at Washington.

The new order comes as the result of a petition signed by a majority of the bishops and ten of the twelve archbishops in the United States last April, praying the holy see to reconsider the order of suspension. Archbishops Moeller of Cincinnati and Schrembs of Cleveland took the petition to Rome, and there explained at length the purposes and objects of the National Catholic Welfare council.

The rules now promulgated make it clear that Rome looked upon the council as an extra ecclesiastical organization which might possibly lead to proceedings which would not be consistent with the hierarchical constitution of the Roman Catholic church.

$100,000 WHISKY HAUL BY POLICE OF NEW ROCHELLE

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Contraband liquor, said to be worth $100,000, was captured by the New Rochelle police in a midnight raid last night on the docks of the Huguenot Coal company. Fifteen prisoners, a motor driven yacht, the Bat, and three automobile trucks were taken.

The crew of the yacht and others were in the act of transferring 600 cases of fine Scotch whiskies to the motor trucks when police swooped down upon the place.

The captain of the yacht escaped. Three men, who, the police say, were ring leaders, described themselves as James Murphy, salesman, Larchmont; William Baldwin, inventor, Darien, Conn.; John Johnson, real estate, 284 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Members of the crew said her home port was Washington, D. C. The cargo, they said, had been received from a three masted schooner off Montauk point. All the prisoners were held in $500 cash bail.

Won't Have to Apologize to Share in $1,000,000 Estate

Muskegon, Mich., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Mrs. Morrison Gilmore, New York society woman, will not have to make a written apology to her brother, B. Archie Linderman, millionaire, to obtain the one-fourth interest of her mother's million dollar estate. Close friends say the codicils of the will of the mother, Mrs. Ella Zimmerman, requiring the apology, will not be pressed by the brother. The mother provided the daughter must make a written statement to her brother for an alleged injustice and admit her entire satisfaction with the division of her mother's property, if she was to share in the estate.

SINCLAIR TEAPOT DOME OIL PROJECT IS INCORPORATED

Cheyenne, Wyo., Aug. 19.—Incorporation papers were filed with the secretary of state here today by the Mammoth Oil Company of Delaware, capitalized at $200,500,000, and organized by the Sinclair Oil interests to develop the Teapot dome naval reserve, under a contract secured from the federal government.

The amount of the capitalization is a nominal sum only, for under the laws of Wyoming such stock is rated at $100 a share, and the Mammoth company capital stock was divided into 2,005,000 shares.

The company paid a filing fee of $40,000. The land which the Mammoth company will develop was that recently involved in the controversy with another company, in which the department of the interior invoked the aid of marines to drive the second company off the property which the government had leased to the Sinclair interests.

It is indorsed by the Farm Bureau federation and the state board of agriculture, and is being given the support of all farm organizations throughout the county.

Forbid Use of Automobile Inner Tubes by Bathers

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 19.—Use of automobile inner tubes by sea bathers at Hermosa beach, a suburb, has been forbidden by ordinance. Recent narrow escapes from drowning convinced the council the custom was dangerous as, it was said, the tubes soon rotted in the water and often collapsed at a distance from shore.

Reader Takes Newer Form of Iron—Feels Years Younger

"Six weeks ago I saw a special offer in the paper telling how thousands of people grow old in looks and energy long before they are really old in years, because, as examinations by physicians have shown, an enormous number of people do not have enough iron in their blood. I have been taking Nuxated Iron for two weeks: the results are simply astounding. The roses have come back in my lips and cheeks, and I can conscientiously say that I feel ten years younger."

The above is a typical hypothetical case showing the results that have been achieved by a great many people since we started this "satisfaction or money back" offer on Nuxated Iron. We will make you the same guarantee. If, after taking for two weeks, the results are Nuxated Iron, you do not feel and look years younger, we will promptly refund your money.

Call at once for a bottle of Nuxated Iron at Buck & Rayner, Economical Drug Co., Block & Wolper, Owl Drug Co., Ashland Supply House, Hillman's Drug Department.

YOU'RE not going to buy the first thing you see in furniture; it's a pleasure, if you have the time, to look around at different things.

You'll be governed, more or less, by the price of the things you see, and like; but there's one mistake to guard against: When you look at furniture, and see what you like, remember that it's the part you can't see that may make the price; the part underneath the finish may be only as good as the price, but it may be not as good as you think it is. Good varnish or upholstery sometimes covers a lot of poor construction.

That's one of the reasons why so many people trust to Scholle-quality; it's sound all through. We guarantee not only the quality, but your satisfaction with the goods; we'd rather not keep money that's paid to us by a customer who is sorry he paid it. It's the best way, in the long run, to be sure on both sides that the transaction is right.

WAR CHIEFS OF CHINA ARM FOR NEW CIVIL WAR

Gens. Chang and Wu Seem Near New Clash.

BY CHARLES DAILEY.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PEKING, Aug. 19.—Signs multiply that China is likely to have further civil war, possibly precipitated by the imminent retirement to Tientsin of President Li Yuan Hung, coupled with the resignation of the cabinet.

Gen. Chang Tso Lin has fully recovered from his spring losses, when he was defeated near Peking, and earnestly is training his troops under Russians and other foreigners. He also has ample money.

Gen. Wu Pei Fu is unable to obtain constructive action in Peking through his dictatorship and sees increasing signs that Gen. Chang, with support from the Anfu clique, hopes to take advantage of the present situation to make a renewed effort to dominate China. While a small group honestly is striving to bring about reunification, the militarists are busier than ever, building war machines to maintain individual supremacy in their respective spheres.

Wu Gets Recruits by Force.

Gen. Wu has decided to remove his headquarters eastward from Loyang to Cheng Chow, thus commanding the Peking-Hankow railway, while he has directed the Christian general, Feng Yu Hsiang, to continue eastward toward the Tientsin-Pukow railway. Gen. Wu's three arsenals have been working feverishly, accumulating vast stocks, and enforced recruiting is going on in all the provinces north of the Yangtze. Telegrams to Peking say the farmers are compelled to abandon their crops and seek hiding places to escape impressment, while coolies everywhere are being rounded up and put in uniforms.

Gen. Chang is getting munitions despite the foreign embargo.

Gen. Wu is desperate for money, and probably will be compelled to imitate the others and seize revenues. Demands on bankers in Hankow and Wuchang to raise 200,000 yen were reluctantly met. Gen. Chang has issued a circular telegram accusing Gen. Wu of meddling in Peking politics. The tension in Peking is tightening tonight, with the feeling that a crisis is unavoidable. It is felt almost certain that Gen. Wu will be compelled to accept Gen. Chang's challenge to new civil war.

Fire on American Steamer.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—The American river steamer Alice Dollar was fired on Aug. 15 near Fuchow on the upper Yangtze river and her captain, G. Crum, slightly wounded, according to advices received by the Robert Dollar company here from Ichang, province of Hupeh.

Volleys were poured into the Alice Dollar from the banks, presumably by troops of both northern and southern forces, which have been reported firing on other vessels on the Yangtze. Hundreds of bullets struck the American steamer, but only the captain was wounded.

Capt. Crum sent all passengers below decks when the shooting started.

Religious Instruction in Schools to Continue

Weekday religious instruction in the public schools of Oak Park and River Forest will be resumed by the Council of Religious education when the schools open in September. Last year 1,183 pupils registered for the religious classes, and the number will be greatly increased this year. The religious teaching is given in the churches, clubhouses, and halls, and none of the public funds are used in the work, the financial support coming through the different churches and lodges. Dr. Carl D. Case is president and George H. Stineman, chairman.

JAIL 3 MEXICAN GENERALS FOR MILITARY PLOT

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

Mexico City, Aug. 19.—An extensive plot centered in the military colony at Atotonilco, Puebla, was discovered today in time to prevent an attack on the city of Puebla. Federal officers are compromised, and there have been numerous arrests among them, including Gens. Juan Buera, Diaz and Figueroa. Government troops dispatched to Atotonilco were attacked by the rebels.

In a battle with federals yesterday at Zacamixla, Tamaulipas, the rebel leader Gen. Elyagui, most formidable enemy of American oil men, was killed and his cohorts put to rout.

After seven hours of battle at San Vicente, Tabasco, rebels retreated to the swamp lands. There were heavy casualties on both sides. Rebels have become so active in Chihuahua that the state legislature has voted to create municipal guards for the protection of towns.

Sprague Scores Hospitals for Vets in Four States

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Government rehabilitation hospital facilities in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska are wholly inadequate, as a result it has been necessary to send men to other districts and to contract hospitals, according to a report of the ninth district rehabilitation committee made to Col. A. A. Sprague of Chicago, chairman of the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion.

Obregon Eases Up Taxes on Owners of Oil Wells

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

Mexico City, Aug. 19.—President Obregon issued a decree today permitting oil men to pay taxes on 40 per cent of face value, as was contemplated when the government agreed to take government bonds at face value, although they were selling for 40 per cent. Because the bonds rose, the government made the latter concession. The decree takes effect at once, being applicable to taxes due since February.

Traveling Man Dies in Hotel Room Here

Failing to get a response to repeated calls yesterday morning, attaches of the Great Northern hotel broke in the door of Alfred Wykes' room and found him dead in bed.

Heart disease, from which he suffered for years, is believed to have caused his death. Wykes' home was in New York. He was a traveling salesman.

JAPANESE FEAR U. S., BELIEF OF FRANK L. WRIGHT

Afraid of Extinction, He Says on Return.

Frank Lloyd Wright, noted Chicago architect, returned to the city yesterday from Japan, where he spent fifty-one months designing and building the $6,000,000 Imperial hotel of Tokio for the Japanese government. He registered in the morning at the Congress hotel and left last night for his summer home in Spring Green, Wis.

"I shall rest a while," he said, "and then I shall determine whether I am to make my headquarters in Chicago or in Los Angeles, where I have an office."

Doesn't Want Exile.

Mr. Wright has been to the orient and back nine times since he accepted the commission of the Japanese government to build the first great modern hotel there. This time, he says, he is back home to stay.

"I do not feel," he explained, "that I want to expatriate myself. I feel that I have work to do in America and if America wants me, I will stay."

He added that he has been offered high honors and many other commissions in Japan, but because of his desire to live in his native land he has turned down virtually all of them. He told interesting details of the building of the new hotel in the Japanese capital and the reasons why the imperial family caused it to be built.

"The Japanese mode of living is entirely different from the American and the European," he said. "The Japanese live on their knees, on the floor on mats. For a foreigner to meet them socially in their homes in their own custom is acute agony.

Afraid of U. S.

"The Japanese realize this, and therefore they have caused this great hotel to be built for the official and social life in the capital. It was almost an economic necessity—a place where the Japanese may meet foreigners socially in the foreigners' own ways and according to their customs."

"How do the Japanese feel about America and Americans?" he was asked.

"They are very much afraid of us," he replied. "They look upon us as a great giant which can crush them if it wants to. And they are anxious to be friendly. There is among the Japanese nothing of the animosity that a great portion of the American press would have the people believe.

Fear Extinction.

"The Japanese have taken the steps they have because they feel they must do so to protect themselves if possible. They know that the white man has swept other races from his path at will—that the Japanese and Chinese are left—and that they may be next to become extinct."

The new hotel project has been a distinct success, Mr. Wright declared, and the government is now planning to build a string of others like it in important cities. The designing and building of these is one of the commissions they have offered him, he said.

CHIEF OF POLICE MISSING; FUNDS SHORT, CHARGE

Waukegan, Ill., Aug. 19.—George Schardt, chief of police of North Chicago, is missing. Efforts to locate him since Tuesday, when he was last seen, having failed, State's Attorney A. H. Smith today was asked to institute search for him. He was appointed chief a year ago last May when Henry M. Deacon was elected mayor. His duties also include those of city collector.

Recently it was learned that Chief Schardt was behind in turning over collections to the city, and he was notified by the mayor, City Clerk James A. Gallagher, and Ald. Frank Svete that, unless he turned over all city funds by Aug. 12, the matter would be placed in the hands of the state's attorney. Last Monday night he turned over a check for $900. The city clerk tonight refused to state whether or not the check has been accepted at the bank, but declared that an investigation is under way.

Chief Schardt's star and gun were found in his office Thursday.

U. S. BALLOONIST SCORES PLAN TO NIP HIS VICTORY

Honeywell to Protest the Award to Belgian.

PARIS, Aug. 19.—[By the Associated Press.]—Capt. H. E. Honeywell, American balloonist, speaking today of the pending decision on whether he or Lieut. Ernest de Muyter, Belgian pilot, will be declared the winner of the recent race for the James Gordon Bennett cup, said:

"If De Muyter wins fairly, my position is that he should have the award. But if he wins unfairly, I'm prepared to protest."

Capt. Honeywell made this statement after reading yesterday's dispatch from Geneva quoting the Belgian balloonist as saying in a message to the race committee that newspaper reports to the effect that his balloon escaped without him from a Roumanian forest were incorrect. De Muyter's message said he had witnesses to prove that his balloon, the Belgica, made its escape twenty-four hours after his first landing.

May Disqualify All.

"It is true that De Muyter's balloon made a greater distance than mine," said Capt. Honeywell, who is on his way to Scotland and thence to St. Louis, his home, "but had I been willing to take a chance of losing my balloon, as did he, I could have stayed up many hours longer.

"The point that appears to be disturbing the committee in making its decision is that if I am given the decision, then this will make the fifth time that Americans have won the race, so that the cup would go definitely to the United States. It has been stated in the French press that if De Muyter is disqualified no winner will be declared. I am unable to see what De Muyter's disqualification has to do with me."

May Ask Investigation.

According to Cortland Field Bishop, who was Capt. Honeywell's representative at Geneva, De Muyter did not report the conditions of his landing either by letter or telegram within forty-eight hours, as required by the rules. Mr. Bishop says he is prepared to demand that an investigation be made of the spot where De Muyter landed in order to establish the manner in which he lost his balloon.

Capt. Honeywell said today he had a large number of Hungarian witnesses to his landing. He said he was treated royally throughout Hungary.

RUSSIANS TO BUY U. S. GRAIN FOR NORTH SECTIONS

Will Sell Southern Crops It Cannot Handle.

BY GRAFTON WILCOX.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Decision of the Russian soviet government to export at least a part of the grain crop now maturing in Russia will work to the benefit of American grain growers, rather than injure them, in the opinion of government experts here.

Indignation voiced in many quarters in this country at the announced intention of the Moscow authorities to export grain when the country is just recovering from the most terrible famine in its history is unwarranted, officials here assert.

Far from operating to the detriment of the Russian people, this course of action, experts here believe, is dictated by stern necessity. The misunderstanding on this subject arose, they point out, from the fact that the soviet delegates at The Hague, either intentionally or unintentionally, gave the impression that grain was to be exported from Russia this year because there was a surplus above the needs of the Russian population.

Russia Has No Surplus.

Since it was well known here that no such surplus could possibly exist, some Americans jumped to the conclusion that Lenin and Trotzky intended to disregard the needs of the peasant population and export grain in order to obtain funds badly needed to support their government.

It was thought they had determined to trust to the charity of the American Relief association and other organizations to bring the peasant population through another winter of starvation.

Inquiry developed that this assumption was entirely unwarranted, officials here say. The truth of the matter is that no surplus of grain exists in Russia today, nor will it exist after the present harvest is passed. In the southern part of Russia there apparently is a good crop of grain, especially in the Ukraine and the Caucasus, once known as the "granary of Europe." In the northern and northeastern districts, however, there is not enough grain, as has always been the case even in prerevolutionary days. Always this section of the country has imported wheat from the southern provinces.

Soviet's Plans.

Such a movement of grain from the southward, however, will be virtually impossible this year, it is asserted, owing to the terrible disintegration of the transportation lines of Russia. To obviate this lack of transportation the Russian authorities contemplate the shipment of all grain above the amount needed for the people of that section to ports on the Black sea, thence to be shipped to the Greek, Italian, and other markets.

With the credits thus established, the soviet authorities expect to enter the markets of London and Liverpool, purchasing supplies of grain and other foodstuffs which could easily be transported to the Moscow, Petrograd, and other northern districts of Russia, which are now cut off from the southern wheat fields.

The greater part of these purchases, it is expected, will be in grain, and, in the normal course of events, experts here point out, the United States would supply a good portion of such grain. Canada and South America might also supply some of it, though it is believed that any unusual demand for grain in the London market would have the effect of bettering the tone of the American market.

Handle Coal Same Way.

In the same manner the soviet economic experts plan to export coal from southern Russia and to purchase it in the British market for use in the northern districts, which, owing to the lack of transportation facilities, are now virtually cut off.

The same reasons prevail in the case of coal as in that of wheat, the mines being located in southern and southeastern Russia, where the transportation to the Black sea is more convenient than toward the north. Nevertheless, the northern districts have great need for coal, and there will have to be extensive purchases in the British market if the people of Petrograd and Moscow are to endure the hardships of the coming winter.

An important point to be taken into consideration in connection with the export of Russian coal to the Mediterranean is the fact that such coal will meet the competition of French coal. With their own supply and that received from Germany on account of war reparations, the French have a considerable surplus of coal, which they are naturally anxious to dispose of to best advantage. This fact will have an important bearing upon the price to be received by the Russians for their coal, and it is believed they will probably have to pay more in the British market than they receive for their products.

Soviet to Control Foreign Trade.

The various commercial transactions contemplated by the soviet authorities in the export of commodities from southern Russia and the import of other products through northwestern Russian ports, naturally call for a definition of policy on the part of the soviet government to be followed in its dealings with foreign nations and subjects.

Such a policy was enunciated at a recent conference on foreign trade in Moscow, which was presided over by Krassin. At this conference it was decided that the soviet government should retain control over all foreign trade, though certain individuals and corporations of known Communistic sympathies might be named as purchasing agents abroad. The plans of the government for carrying out the transactions contemplated during the next four or five months, call for this sort of control.

Experts here disagree as to the amount of commodities likely to be available for export under the scheme outlined. Apparently no doubt exists as to the abundance of the crop in southern Russia, though the yield is scarcely equal to the best pre-revolutionary years owing largely to the scarcity of fertilizer, due to the killing off of much of the stock.

SUGGESTS U. S. SUBSIDIES FOR MUNITION PLANTS

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Samuel M. Vauclain, head of the Baldwin Locomotive works, today conferred with Secretary of War Weeks in connection with a plan formulated by Vauclain for keeping armament and munitions plants built during the war intact for future emergency by means of government subsidies.

Approximately a dozen great munitions plants, Mr. Vauclain pointed out, were constructed by private enterprise during the war at a cost of millions of dollars. These plants are practically useless for any other purpose than that for which they were constructed.

Closed Since War.

Since the signing of the armistice they have been closed and unless some plan can be evolved for making it worth while to their owners to keep them intact, they will be junked.

The suggestion made by Mr. Vauclain is that the government pay a subsidy of 2 per cent, annually to the owners in order that the plants may be kept ready for instant operation in case of emergency.

In all approximately twelve plants are involved, Secretary Weeks stated. In some cases, a single plant involves an investment of as much as $10,000,000. Figuring a subsidy of 2 per cent, this would mean that on such a plant the government would pay $200,000 annually for the upkeep of the institution.

Baldwin Not Involved.

The Baldwin Locomotive works is not involved in the plan, it was stated. There has been no organization or interests holding the munitions plant properties, it was stated, Mr. Vauclain having taken the initiative merely in the interests of a concern of which he is a director.

The secretary has referred the matter back to the ordnance department with instructions that ordnance experts go into the situation.

SLAYS SURGEON IN HIS OFFICE, THEN KILLS SELF

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 19.—Dr. J. J. Eklund, 60, surgeon, was shot and killed in his office here today by John Magnusson, who then committed suicide.

Police were unable to advance any motive for the shooting.

Magnusson, who was 41 and single, had just quitted the office of Dr. W. J. Sklund, son of the slain man, walked across the hall to the surgeon's office and fired three shots into the elder Eklund's head as he sat with his back to the door.

OWL, HUNGRY FOR CHICKEN, STEALS HENHOUSE KEYS

Salem, Ore., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Most owls like chicken meat and a boot owl has a key to the henhouse at the state hospital for the insane. Also the owl has the key that unlocks the switch on the automobile of A. D. Zinser, superintendent of the poultry yards.

It happened like this:

Zinser heard the hoot owl hoot. He feared for the chicks. Not having a gun or a rock at hand he took a heavy bunch of keys from his pocket, crept within throwing distance of the owl, and let drive.

The keys went wild and dropped into the grass. The owl flitted from the tree, picked up the keys, and disappeared.

U. S. AGENTS SIFT RUM PLOT STORY; CLEAR M'KINLEY

Find There Was No Basis for Use of His Name.

Government agents checking up on the mysterious chain of events which involved the names of Senator William B. McKinley and his secretary, Chester Willoughby, in the correspondence dismissing Joseph Tatro from the United States prohibition service, last night were reported at the federal building to have announced that the senator and his secretary were groundlessly mentioned.

David Nolan, acting chief special agent for the revenue department, recently sent a letter of charges to Joseph A. Tatro, special agent, in which he informed Tatro that he (Tatro) had made unwarranted charges against Senator McKinley, in connection with the removal of the whisky.

Made Public Through Letter.

When Tatro was dismissed from the service a few days later he gave out copies of the letter. As he had already denied he had involved Senator McKinley's name, it was pointed out, the senator's name would not have been mentioned had not Nolan used it in his letter.

A reliable informant, familiar with the entire transaction in which the 1,800 cases of whisky were involved, corroborated the reports of the government agents to their chiefs.

"McKinley had nothing to do with the deal," this informant said. "I know all about it, and everybody involved, and I gave the government some of its information concerning it. I know the men who were in it; and McKinley is not one of them."

Another who asserted that Senator McKinley had nothing to do with the deal was Charles W. Carey, former prohibition agent, credited by Tatro with giving him much information concerning it.

Knows Mystery Man.

The man who said he knows all about the transaction also asserted he knows the identity of the mysterious Mr. Yondorf, who is reported to have obtained the fraudulent permit for the removal of the whisky and offered to buy it for $53,000.

"His name is not Yondorf," this man said. "He's a Chicago man well known in the big booze ring. The name Yondorf was used because there are two Yondorf brothers, notorious confidence men, one of whom is at present in New York City and the other, I believe, is serving a term in the federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga.

"The men in the deal figured if they used the Yondorfs' name, and anything became known of the deal it would lead the authorities to the two notorious brothers, thus throwing them completely off the right track."

Brings in New Figure.

In the meantime, Tatro, in a statement last night, involved another person in the deal. He charges an Indianapolis man with obtaining the blank permit on which the order for the removal of the whisky was written.

"This man came here about a year ago," Tatro said, "and he is now in Denver, Colo. He appeared in Chicago some time before the deal was pulled off. He exhibited papers purporting to show he was to be made United States marshal in Chicago when Marshal Bradley finished his term.

"He was a convincing talker; told stories about how he could fix 'anything' when he became marshal and declared he could obtain permits to 'move the whole state of Kentucky.' He obtained $7,000 from certain persons, and then suddenly Robert Levy was made marshal.

"When those from whom he obtained money called him on his claims that he would be marshal, he convinced them he had a 'bigger job' coming; and he went out and obtained $7,000 more. Finally he was the man who obtained the blank permit which was used for the removal of the 1,800 cases, and then he left the city."

STUDY PROBLEM OF HOUSING GIRLS COMING TO CITY

Women Send Out Data on Rooming Places.

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

Where are you going to live in Chicago?

It's the most important question to all girls coming to the city this fall to work or to attend school, according to members of the housing committee of the organization of social agencies, which met yesterday at the Young Woman's Christian Association rooms, Stevens building, to discuss the rooming house situation in Chicago.

As a result of a recent survey of the city's housing facilities for the young girl, the committee, consisting of Miss Grace Coulter, chairman; Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, Miss Ida Watt, Mrs. Harry Hart, Miss Anna Ward, and Miss Elizabeth Webster, prepared a pamphlet, "Where Are You Going to Live in Chicago?" for immediate distribution.

Will Send Out Booklets.

"We plan to send these booklets in large quantities to travelers' aid and other social agencies in Chicago, to large firms, and to schools," said Miss Coulter. "But the real work should be done before the girl packs her grip and leaves her home town for the big city."

That the newcomer may know the facts about rooms in Chicago these pamphlets will be sent to the woman's clubs in all the cities and small towns of Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. Local newspapers will also be asked to cooperate.

The boarding home instead of the hall bedroom in a private family is advocated by the committee for the young girl who is unfamiliar with the city. But there are not enough such homes, according to Miss Watt, who reports that "more than 1,500 girls were unable to get into boarding homes in Chicago during a recent month."

Forty-six Homes Listed.

Forty-six homes are listed in the pamphlet. All but four furnish board and room. Two furnish two meals a day and two have cafeteria privileges.

Fifteen of the homes are sectarian; ten are nonsectarian; three are for colored girls, two for Jewish girls, and one for Norwegian girls. The committee agreed that more specialized homes are needed.

That large firms and schools and business colleges operate homes for their girls is recommended by the committee, which points out that organizations and clubs have proved that it can be done with no financial loss.

Not Wanted in Some Places.

"When a student goes into a home where most of the girls are business women," said one of the committee, "things don't go so well. The business girl comes home tired and is annoyed with the girl next door who is practicing her singing lesson. And she is particularly irritated with the girl across the hall who is fingering her exercises on the typewriter. The business girl doesn't want to hear a typewriter after her day's work is done."

As to prices, the survey lists board and room per week at one home as low as $5.50. The highest weekly price noted was from $15 to $17.50 at a north side club for girls who are interested in music, drama, or the fine arts. The average price for the week is $6.50.

Seek to Bring Meeting of N. E. A. Branch to Chicago

John H. Beveridge, president, and S. D. Shankland, secretary, of the department of superintendents of the National Educational association, conferred with Peter A. Mortensen, superintendent of schools, yesterday relative to bringing the 10,000 members of the department to Chicago next February for their annual meeting. Prospects of obtaining the meeting for Chicago are good, Supt. Mortensen said.

STRIVE TO BEAT LOW BIDDER OUT OF BIG LIGHT JOB

City Hallites Seek to Give It to Midwest Co.

Whether the $1,620,000 city electric light contract, made possible when the voters authorized the issuance of $2,000,000 of bonds to pay for 14,000 new street lights last June, is to be let to the lowest bidder or is to be turned over to a concern in which Lundin-Thompson politicians are interested at a higher bid, is to be decided at a conference between Mayor Thompson and Commissioner of Gas and Electricity Carlson scheduled for tomorrow.

GEO. E. CARLSON. (TRIBUNE Photo.)

Although according to figures compiled by Mr. Carlson and turned over to Ald. John A. Richert, chairman of the council finance committee, the bid of the A. A. Electric company, 4012 Ogden avenue is low for the big job by approximately $100,000, there has been a mysterious delay in awarding the contract.

The bids were received July 26. The bid of the A. A. Electric company was approximately $1,620,000. This bid was so low that Mr. Carlson was surprised as he had figured that the work would cost $1,700,000.

Midwest Next Low Bid.

The next to low bid was that of the Midwest Construction company, which has been fortunate in getting city contracts in the past. Following receipt of the bids, Mr. Carlson made the following statement to a TRIBUNE reporter:

"I will keep my promise, made when the $2,000,000 bond issue went before the people, to give the job to the low bidder, so that the voters will get the most possible out of their money."

Since that time strong pressure has been brought to bear on the commissioner, however. Backers of the Midwest concern hurried to Mayor Thompson with a plea that the contract be awarded to their concern. The mayor called in Mr. Carlson and after hearing both sides is said to have given his consent to the awarding of the contract to the A. A. Electric company.

Still More Pressure.

But still the contract was not awarded. More pressure was brought to bear on Mr. Carlson, it is reported. On one occasion a man next in Lundin-Thompson councils to Mr. Lundin visited the commissioner with a plea for the Midwest company. Mr. Carlson is said to have threatened to resign if not permitted to let the contract to the lowest bidder. One rumor current yesterday was that a compromise has been reached and that the bids are to be thrown out on the ground that there has been a slight reduction in the price of cable since the bids were received.

SIX SEIZED AS COUNTERFEITERS OF BOOZE STAMPS

Six men were arraigned before United States Commissioner Louis F. Mason yesterday on charges of counterfeiting government bonded whisky stamps. Each was released in bonds of $5,000. According to government agents, the men also were doing a big business in forged whisky labels, duplicating names of many well known brands.

Those arraigned gave these names and addresses: Harry Howard, 213 East 44th street; William West, 4055 South Michigan avenue; Samuel Block, 870 South State street; Matthew McInerney, 20 East Delaware place; Henry Sanger, 152 South State street, and Clarence T. Holden, 20 East Delaware place.

Extra long springs of special steel give Jewett it's easy riding action

See how long are the springs of the Jewett compared with cars of its size. Front springs, 36 inches; rear, 54 inches—total, 90 inches of springs. No car in its class so liberally sprung as the Jewett—hence Jewett's extra comfort. The springs are of special alloy steel—the axles tough Timkens.

Comfort also comes from extra-deep springs under genuine leather upholstery—restful seat positions—42-inch leg room—low-hung body. Comparing the comfort of the Jewett with cars selling at or near its price, you find no reason for paying more—many reasons for not being contented with less.

And as delightful in performance as in comfort is this Sturdy Six. It travels the highways at 2 to 60 miles an hour in high gear—picks up speed in traffic snarls from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds—tops Hubbard Hill from a standing start at the bottom, in high gear, at 33 miles an hour.

No car in this class has ever before attained such performance—because none so amply powered. Jewett has 50 H. P. and weighs 2,805 lbs.—more power per pound of weight than ANY car at or near its size. And it has the same high pressure motor lubrication as the costliest cars—the warrant of a long-lived motor.

We want you to drive the Jewett—test its comfort and performance—appreciate its marvelous ease of handling—assured by ample power, ball-bearing steering spindles, stop-spin clutch, lightning-like gear shifts. At $995 it has no equal within hundreds of dollars of its price.

JULIETTE DAY.

STAR OF STAGE TO GET DIVORCE, JUDGE TELLS HER

Charges She Supported Her Architect Husband.

Juliette Day, star in "Her Temporary Husband," now playing at the Cort theater, and known in private life as Mrs. Juliette Phipps Haig, received assurance yesterday from Judge Charles A. McDonald that she would be granted her freedom from Quentin Frederick Haig, well known New York architect.

Charges She Supported Him.

In response to questions by her attorney, Harry A. Newby, the actress said she was married on June 18, 1913, and that until their separation on Sept. 1, 1916, she had been compelled to support Haig.

"He refused to work most of the time," said Mrs. Haig. "I was playing on the west coast in 1916 and he wired that unless I returned to him in New York, that he was through with me. He never contributed to my support and a large share of my earnings were spent on him."

Chicagoan Corroborates Her.

Mrs. Haig's testimony was corroborated by Paul Whitney, 2012 West 59th street, vice president of the Whitney Duplicating Check company. No provision for alimony will be included in the decree, which provides that Mrs. Haig may resume her malden name of Juliette Phipps Day.

FIRST 50 GONE

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Fairchild.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Fairchild, Harvey pioneers, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on Monday at a family reunion and informal reception for immediate friends. They were married in Flint, Mich. Two daughters, Mrs. C. R. Grover and Mrs. P. H. Miller, reside in Chicago.

HARDING NOT TO COME BUT MOOSE HOLD CONVENTION

Despite the fact that President Harding will probably be unable to attend, the Loyal Order of Moose are going ahead with their international convention at Mooseheart, Ill. Hope that the President may be able to be present on President's day, next Friday, is still held out; but it was stated that the rail and coal crises would probably make it impossible for him to be present.

A delegation of 500 members of the Greater Chicago lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, will leave Chicago for Mooseheart, where special headquarters have been arranged for them. A fifty piece band, under the leadership of H. H. Whittier, and 200 uniformed men will lead a parade in honor of President Harding.

THIRD PLANE VICTIM DIES.

Brattleboro, Vt., Aug. 19.—Evelyn Harris, who was severely injured and burned yesterday in the airplane crash in which James Trapan and his 5 year old son were killed, died today. She was the daughter of Charles A. Harris, a banker of this city.

"BABY BANDITS" STEAL COOKIES AND $20 IN RAID

Three "baby bandits" who held up Isaac Weinberg, 3349 West 38th place, and robbed him of $20 and some cookies, were arrested yesterday while standing in front of a movie theater at Archer and South Sacramento avenues, eating cookies.

They are Frank Stopka, 16 years old, 5536 South Kilbourn avenue; Charles Amatas, 14, 5525 South Tripp avenue, and Marvin Davis, 16, 2129 West Lake street.

Weinberg told the police that when the boys entered his store one of them carried a revolver. When the boys were arrested no revolver was found, but the police recovered $20.

27 Near Electric Chair Ask Electric Fans During Heat

Ossining, N. Y., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Several of the twenty-seven murderers in the Sing-Sing death house are complaining of the heat, which, because of cramped quarters and poor ventilation, has caused great suffering, and have asked electric fans be installed.

Relieve the dandruff now

HAIR cannot grow if the scalp is coated over with dandruff. It's a germ disease that makes the scalp unhealthy by clogging up the pores and choking hair growth. This causes the hair to lose its luster and to fall out.

The best treatment known for sick scalps is Sergeant's Mange Medicine, which has been famous for more than 40 years. Sergeant's helps your hair troubles by relieving your scalp troubles. Its sulphuretted pure natural oils are scientifically blended so as to penetrate the scalp tissues. It relieves dandruff by overcoming the microbes that prey on the hair bulbs, and also stimulates the hair roots. Thus the hair growth is promoted.

Doctors recommend Sergeant's; Barbers apply it. Take a bottle home to-day—satisfaction guaranteed or money back.

TALK OF BEER AND WINE LAW FOLLY, SAYETH W. J. B.

Hannibal, Mo., Aug. 19.—All talk about weakening the Volstead act is "buncombe," William Jennings Bryan told an Associated Press representative here today.

"The people who talk it admit that it is when they fail to define the change they want," he said. "So long as the eighteenth amendment remains in the constitution, the Supreme court cannot permit a law authorizing the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor, and no modification that does not permit that will suit those who want modification.

"All this talk of wine and beer coming back is foolishness. The sentiment in favor of wine is comparatively small; the sentiment in favor of beer is larger, but not large enough to prescribe the use of beer even as a medicine. Beer cannot be brought back without the breweries and the breweries have been more active, if possible, in the corruption of politics than the distilleries."

The West Chicago park commissioners announce the following concerts, between the hours of 8 and 10 p. m., for next week: Monday, Harrison park; Tuesday, Columbus park; Wednesday, Garfield park; Thursday, Humboldt park; Friday, Sheridan park; Saturday, Union and Douglas parks.

MRS. ROBBINS TO HAVE HER SON 3 DAYS EACH WEEK

Amicable adjustment of difficulties between Cutler H. Robbins, son of a former vice president of Armour & Co., and his divorced wife, Mrs. Mary Robbins, over the custody of their child, George B. Robbins III., was effected yesterday by Judge Fisher in an order allowing Mrs. Robbins periodical control of the boy.

Judge Fisher's ruling followed heated arguments between Attorneys Morris G. Leonard, representing Mrs. Robbins, and Avern Scolni, counsel for Robbins, who threatened each other with blows.

The new order provides that Mrs. Robbins may have custody of the boy on three afternoons a week, from 2 until 7 o'clock, and restrains Robbins from interfering with Mrs. Robbins on the child on those days.

Mrs. Hylan Decides It; Mayor Not a Candidate

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The final decision of Mayor Hylan that he would not be a candidate for governor was made known today. Mrs. Hylan said she wanted him to stay as mayor of New York.

"You can say," said the mayor, "that my decision not to run for governor was made on the deck of the Paris, steaming up New York bay. Mrs. Hylan says no, and that settles it.

"Thirty-two years ago next month we were married, and Mrs. Hylan has struggled with me in all that time. All I have I owe to her guidance and help. She has been my constant inspiration."

"WHAT TO DO"

"I didn't think I could afford your quality. I came near not looking here, as I didn't wish to see furniture I couldn't have."

Such was a remark overheard on the sales floor the other day.

Needless to say, the young lady, who was making her first purchases, was delightfully surprised that real quality goods cost little or no more than the "cheap." She had "just so much" to buy with, but she was able to buy furniture of taste and quality.

Another advantage in shopping!

The Most Talked Of Barber Shop In Chicago

And the Reason Why:

INTELLIGENT business men demand a dollar's worth for a dollar—and they get it—at the "CRYSTAL". Measured by the usual standards—they get more than a dollar's worth—and there you have the reason for "CRYSTAL'S" popularity among particular, intelligent men.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Take the matter of hair-cuts. You'll see men walking out of this shop with that INDESCRIBABLE AIR OF DRESSINESS—of being WELL-GROOMED. Their heads seem to sit squarely upon their shoulders and they look calm, confident and cool—yes, cool, strange as that may seem to you—for the "CRYSTAL" is cool even in August.

* * * * * * * * * * *

You wonder why they look so suave, and how they manage it—and it probably never occurred to you to think that a hair-cut is a very important factor in contributing to your appearance.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is! An expert barber can keep you looking at your best; can bring out the best in you; can add a well-groomed dressiness to your appearance that becomes distinction and character—because a "CRYSTAL" expert barber gives you an individual hair-cut—one suited to you —to your shape of head—to your wishes and individuality. Not every barber can do it—it takes an expert—and there are 20 at your service at the "CRYSTAL" under the constant supervision of the owner, Mr. Cominos, who is acknowledged to be an expert and an authority.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Your head is an important part of you. Treat it with consideration—don't allow your appearance to be a haphazard affair as many men do. They get a hair-cut at the first shop they come to—somewhat in the same spirit as getting a shine.

* * * * * * * * * * *

If you think your head deserves better attention and more consideration—if you are particular about your appearance —if you want an individual hair-cut that will improve your appearance—come to the "CRYSTAL." You'll like this shop. It's the most thoroughly and scientifically equipped barber shop in this country.

* * * * * * * * * * *

And our barbers are well paid men; business men engaged in a business. We have no desperate conversationalists or alleged humorists. "CRYSTAL" barbers will answer you—intelligently—if you ask questions—but they don't tell you the jokes of a decade ago. You can lay back in your chair and enjoy one of our wonderful shave-mafsages and sleep to your heart's content—in peace and silence.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By the way—
ALL OUR PRICES ARE THE SAME AS THOSE THAT PREVAIL IN ANY OTHER FIRST-CLASS LOOP SHOP.

NORTH SHORE TO HAVE $750,000 GARDEN OF EDEN

Work Under Way on Golf and Dancing Paradise.

BY AL CHASE.

Some inspired individual christened what is intended to be the world's most gorgeous open air place of amusement, the twenty acre bit of woodland and field just four miles west of Glencoe, at the southeast corner of the Wheeling and Waukegan roads. He named it the Garden of Eden, and rivals will have a darned hard time to think up a better name. Unfortunately, we don't know who this inspired christener is.

The owners are Frank L. Hoffman, who lives at 2041 Kenilworth avenue, and Andrew Bauer, whose home is not far away at No. 2306. They are the sole owners, by the way, and are selling no stock in the project.

To Cost Over $750,000.

Just a few lines were written about this project in this department several weeks ago. Since then it has gotten under way. Mr. Hoffman yesterday negotiated a $400,000 loan through the Chicago Title and Trust company. The total cost of the project, it is claimed, will run over three quarters of a million.

Briefly here's what the modern Garden of Eden will be: A combination of country club and a glorified amusement garden of the Marigold type, only much larger, more modern and gorgeous. For instance, work already is under way on the casino, a structure 300 feet long and 150 feet wide, in the Spanish type of architecture. [Of course it should have been in the style of the Adam period.] There'll be a large cafe with seats for 2,400 and a dancing floor large enough for 2,000 couples at one time.

Plenty of Dancing Space.

On the stage elaborate revues will be given, changing every two months, with big time vaudeville and dancing by guests during the evening. In warm weather the open air dancing floor will be used. This will be surrounded by tables for 10,000, with room for 25,000 in an emergency.

The upper floors of the casino will be used for private parties and special banquets. The main banquet hall, to be called the Diamond room, will seat 1,800. A. J. Fisher & Son are the architects.

$50,000 Electric Fountain.

Hollister & Root, landscape architects, have drawn an elaborate and beautiful grouping of buildings, drives, fountain and lake on the wooded tract. After leaving the casino and open air dance space, one crosses an artificial lake by a small bridge, coming to a $50,000 electric fountain.

Passing this one comes to the Garden of Eden Golf club, a separate organization. The initiation fee to this will be $250, with no further dues, says Mr. Hoffman. Club members may attend the revues without cost. The general public will pay $1.10, according to present plans.

George O'Neil is chairman of the greens committee of the club, and is laying out the miniature eighteen hole course. There'll be tennis courts and other outdoor attractions. Tournaments and exhibitions will be staged weekly. "Chick" Evans is chairman of the sports and pastimes committee of the club.

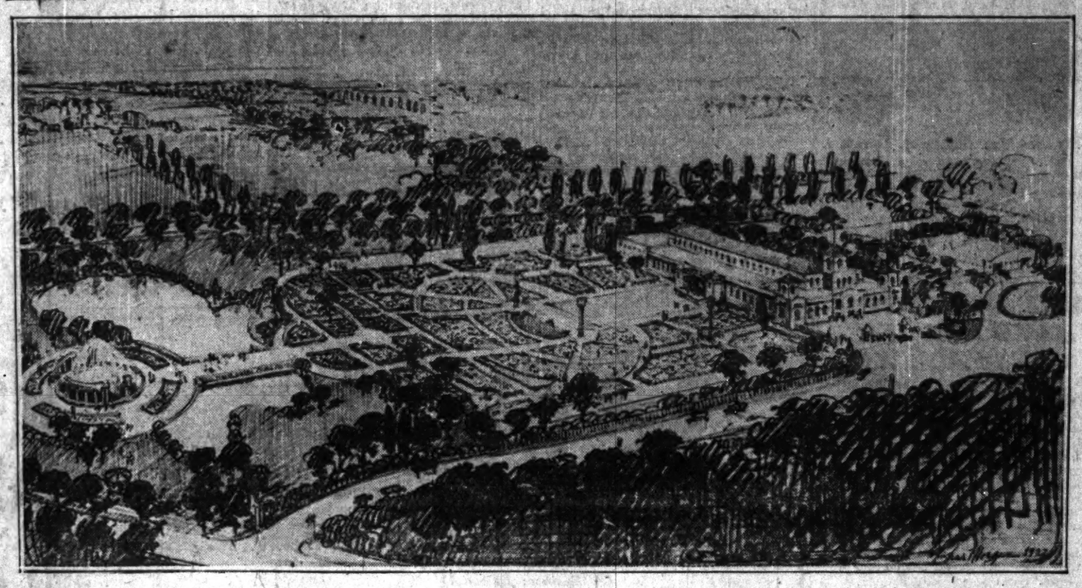
Busses to Paradise.

Arrangements have been made with the same company which operates the busses from Carson Pirie's to the west side stations, to run a bus line de luxe along the North Shore. The contemplated fare will be $1.

Mr. Hoffman was emphatic in his statement that the Garden of Eden will contain no applejack. It's not to be a road house in any sense of that word, he says, and no drinking will be permitted. At the present rate work is progressing he hopes to have his prospective North Shore paradise ready for the fox trotters and the golf swatters some time next April.

Readers will please note that aside from one slight slip, we got through writing this story without pulling any A. or E. stuff. And with that Eden moniker, we'll say it was hard work not to.

Chicago's Newest and Greatest Amusement Gardens



At the southeast corner of the Wheeling and Waukegan roads, close to Shermerville and three miles west of Glencoe, work has started on what it is claimed will be one of the world's most beautiful open air places of amusement. It's a twenty acre tract owned by Frank L. Hoffman and Andrew Bauer, and is being transformed into "The Garden of Eden" through the ministrations of Landscape Architects Root & Hollister and Architects A. J. Fisher & Son. Additional facts about the project are given in a nearby column.

ANNUAL FROLIC OF REALTORS TO BE IN MICHIGAN

John R. Magill Offers a "President's Cup."

Chicago realtors will hold their annual outing this year in another state, Grand Beach, Mich., having been selected by the general committee, of which S. Charles Iversen is chairman. A special train over the Michigan Central will take members of the Chicago real estate board over on the morning of Tuesday, Sept. 11, and bring them back late that night.

S. CHARLES IVERSEN. [Walinger Photo.]

The additional announcement that President John R. Magill has offered a "president's cup" for the best golf, in addition to the other prizes, probably will add materially to the list of golf entries. The cup must be won three times by an individual in order to be retained permanently, though that doesn't mean three successive years necessarily.

Chicken Dinner on the Beach.

In addition to a chicken dinner on the beach, there'll be swimming races, tennis, quoits, baseball, etc., with prizes in all contests.

On Mr. Iversen's committee are Henry George Slavik, Edward J. Lindahl, Samuel Hodge, and Col. Valentine H. Surghnor. J. Percy Strickland is chairman of the golf committee, the other members being Mark Levy and Leo J. Varty. The tennis committee is: A. Lincoln Greene, chairman; Newton B. Lauren, Harry Prussing. Baseball, James J. Carroll, chairman; Richard J. Curto, and James W. Belanger. Swimming, John P. Hooker, chairman; John J. Ready Jr., Arthur H. Curtis. Races and miscellaneous games, A. S. Ruud, chairman; James B. Kane and Herbert A. Cole.

Hour and a Half Trip.

The special train is scheduled to make the trip in one and a half hours each way.

Lawrence Avenue Terminal Stores to Be Ready Sept. 1

The long strip of one story stores now being erected on a frontage of 360 feet on Lawrence and Kimball avenues, adjoining the Ravenswood "L" terminal, is announced for Sept. 1 completion. Z. Erol Smith is architect. There'll be twenty-one shops. The Bankers' State bank made a $75,000 loan on this property.

Dr. Julia Strawn Buys Gold Coast House on Schiller

Some Gold Coast residence sales reported by Harold Bradley & Co. include the house at 38 East Schiller, sold by J. Frederick Kehm to Dr. Julia Strawn for $22,000; the ten room house at 51 East Division, bought by E. Williams from Mrs. Edward B. Huling for $20,000, and the property at 45 East Division, sold by Mrs. Nellie C. E. Bedell for $19,000 to Thomas Quinn Beesley, who will remodel it.

20,000 Forest Preserve Maps to Be Ready Shortly

Don't hurry over to the forest preserve commissioners tomorrow and try to get one of those free booklets of "Maps and Routes to Forest Preserves and Golf Clubs," compiled by H. E. Rice and R. H. Ginsberg, in case you've heard they've got some more on hand, for you'll be disappointed. Joseph Dillabough informs us, however, that a second edition of these popular maps, 20,000 of 'em, are now on the presses, and should be on hand about next week, possibly the last of this week.

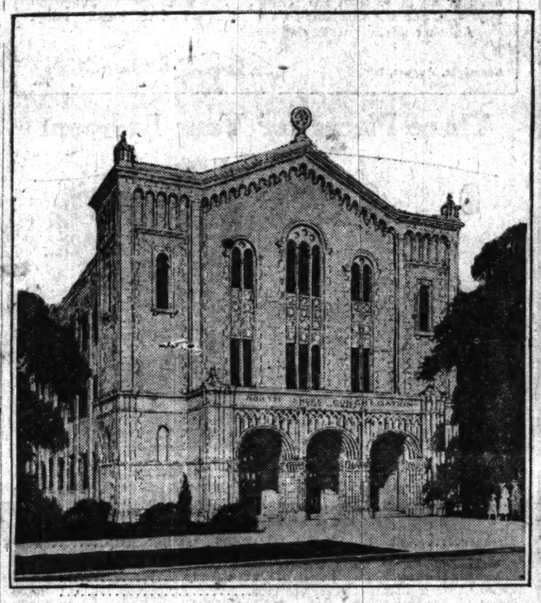
Mayor to Lay Corner Stone Today



Mayor Thompson and Judge Harry M. Fisher will officiate today at 2:30 p. m. at the laying of the corner stone of the North Shore Congregation Sons of Israel synagogue to be built at 5029 Kenmore avenue, from plans by Architect R. Bernard Kurzon. The estimated cost of the new temple is $200,000. The Rev. David Almond is rabbi and Ben Stone is president of the congregation. The other officers are: Max Rifas, vice president; Maurice J. Nathanson, secretary, and H. Krulewich, treasurer. Capt. H. Waiss is chairman of the building committee.

New Broadway Improvement

McNally, Quinn & Co. and Leichenko & Esser, associate architects and engineers, have designed the above building, to be called "The Roscoe," now under way at the northwest corner of Broadway and Roscoe. There'll be seven stores and twenty-four apartments. The total investment is claimed to be $320,000. More details are told in another column.

ROOF GARDEN FOR TENANTS OF NEW WINONA BEACH

Work has just begun on a six story fireproof flat building at 918 Winona street, east of Sheridan road and fifty yards from the lake shore, to be called the Winona Beach apartments. Architect John A. Nyden has designed a building to contain forty-eight apartments of two, three, and four rooms, all to have buffet kitchens. The flats will be rented unfurnished.

A large roof garden will be provided for tenants and a special entrance and showers for bathers. The building will front 50 feet on Winona and will be 145 deep deep. It is just southwest of and adjacent to the new Admiral hotel, also designed by Mr. Nyden.

The Winona Beach Apartment Building corporation, of which F. D. Hayes is president, is the owner. A first mortgage bond issue of $250,000 has been underwritten by Comiossy & Co., who state the property will be valued at $400,000 on completion.

DEMING PLACE SALE.

Theresa O. D. Paul paid a reported $28,000 to A. J. Behrendt for the six apartments at 456 Deming place, through Harold Bradley & Co.

ANOTHER DE LUXE HOTEL FOR NORTH SIDE BACHELORS

North side bachelors certainly are the favored ones of Chicago's host of unmarried males. Here's another luxurious hotel planned exclusively for single men, to be five stories, to have 100 rooms, and to cost approximately $275,000. It'll be on the present vacant 50x150 at 1242-44 North Dearborn street, between Division and Goethe.

Otto B. Von Linde, who is associated with Perry Ulrich, has bought the site from Mrs. Elizabeth Brosseau, through John W. Uphaus, for $22,300, and is having plans drawn by Architect Carl W. Westerlind for what he says will be one of the most elaborate and comfortable bachelor hotels in the country.

LOTUS BUILDING READY OCT. 1.

The Lotus building, a three story business block, at the northeast corner of Madison and Lotus, now under construction, will be completed Oct. 1. It was designed by Leichenko & Esser and will cost a reported $60,000. It will have a store the entire length of the first floor, six offices for physicians and dentists, and three flats. Herman Schlachet is owner. The Equitable Bond and Mortgage company has underwritten a $50,000 bond issue.

Realty Notes

James T. Kilcran, superintendent of the map and publicity department of the county recorder's office, is on his annual period of recuperation from the arduous task of supplying the real estate editors with data on realty deals which look promising from a news standpoint. Mr. Kilcran is spending most of his vacation time at his south shore home making the garden grow.

Max Loeb of the Loeb-Hammel Realty company announces that he has sold sixteen of the twenty-six two flat buildings now being erected on Winnemac avenue and Argyle street for a total of $221,500.

Te Globe Realty company states that Saul A. Kurlin, formerly head of S. A. Kurlin & Co., is now associated with it as sales manager at 127 North Dearborn. The company also has offices at Jackson, Miss., and Memphis, Tenn.

George S. Ballard & Co. announce that owing to the need of additional space they have moved their offices from suite 1325 to 827 in the First National Bank building.

WATER ON ROOF IS NEWEST WAY TO COOL FACTORY

Keeping down the temperature and making employees more comfortable by having a two inch sheet of water over their heads, is the latest novelty in industrial construction in the Chicago manufacturing district, according to Vice President Valerius of the Davis-Watkins Dairymen's Manufacturing company.

The use of a water sealed roof, said Mr. Valerius, was originated by Architect W. Hoffman of the Rolff Construction company of Milwaukee, and has proven successful in the east and in his home town.

"We're using a tar and gravel roof," explained Mr. Valerius, "and over it we'll maintain a four inch sheet of water which will keep the temperature about twelve degrees lower than normal and of course will reduce the fire hazards."

The Davis-Watkins concern is erecting a two story addition to its North Chicago plant, 160x120, and on the roof of this will be the miniature lake. The building will be of concrete, steel and glass. It will cost $80,000. The Rolff Construction company is building it. About 100 new employees will be added to the present 200 when the addition is finished. The company has three other factories, at Jersey City, Derby, Conn., and Owatonna, Minn.

WORK UNDER WAY ON "THE ROSCOE"

The northwest corner of Broadway and Roscoe street is being improved with a four story fireproof, concrete and steel store and apartment building, to be known as the Roscoe. Work started a few days ago, with Dec. 15 set as completion date. It was designed by McNally, Quinn & Co. and Leichenko & Esser associate architects and engineers. Henry Minkus, vice president of See, Moon & Co., wholesale grocers, is owner. Wollenberger & Co. have underwritten a $170,000 bond issue. The building faces 121 feet on Broadway and 70 on Roscoe. All deliveries for tenants will be left in a locker room, where each flat dweller will have an individual steel locker. The project involves a total investment said to be $320,000.

Makes $205,000 Loan on New Evanston Apartments

Architect Roy F. France has made a $205,000 loan on his new forty-two apartment building he is now erecting at the northwest corner of Sherman and Noyes, Evanston. It will be completed the first of the year and will cost a reported $400,000.

E. A. CUMMINGS, REALTOR FOR 53 YEARS, RETIRES

3 Partners to Continue Under New Name.

Edmund A. Cummings, founder and head of E. A. Cummings & Co., one of Chicago's oldest and best known real estate firms, yesterday announced his retirement from that organization after fifty-three years' active participation in its affairs. Three of his partners, Charles O. Goss, Edward S. Judd, and Ralph J. Sherman will continue the business under the firm name of Goss, Judd & Sherman, but with the additional words "successors to E. A. Cummings & Co.," which means the keeping alive in the realty world the famous old name.

Not Going to California.

Mr. Cummings is one of the few retiring Chicago business men who isn't going to spend his carefree days in California.

"Certainly not," was his emphatic eply to the suggestion. "I'm going o keep on living right here in Illinois."

Mr. and Mrs. Cummings, by the way, have lived for forty-three years on the same lot in Oak Park, 163 North Lombard avenue, and that's where Mr. Cummings is going to continue his residence.

Fooled the Grave Diggers.

Mr. Cummings' long life—he was born in Lowell, Mass., on Nov. 29, 1842, so he'll be 80 next fall—has been an interesting one, but probably the most unusual event and interesting to him, now that its' in the past, was when he had a grave dug for him with the expectation that he'd fill it the following day.

Mr. Cummings was living in Elgin when the civil war broke out. He enlisted in the 127th Illinois under Col. John Van Armin. When Gen. Grant was at Vicksburg, Mr. Cummings was sent with a message to Gen. Sherman's headquarters, then at Jackson, Miss.

He arrived there so exhausted with sunstroke and general fatigue that the army physicians said he couldn't live more than a day and ordered a grave dug. But some one else was planted there, for Mr. Cummings fooled the doctors by getting well. He was with Sherman in his march to the sea.

Marketed 200 Subdivisions.

Some time after the war—in 1869—he established his real estate business and has been active ever since. His firm has placed on the market in the neighborhood of 200 subdivisions during its fifty-three years' activity. H. A. Brown & Co., by the way, are going to continue to manage all of the Cummings subdivisions for the new named firm, which will continue the present business without any changes in operation.

Mr. Cummings has several grandchildren, although his four sons and two daughters are all dead.

Of the members of the new firm, Mr. Goss has been with E. A. Cummings & Co. for forty-five years and has been a partner in the firm. He is president of the Flossmoor Country club and has been active in Chicago real estate board matters.

Founder of National Body.

Mr. Judd, also a member of the firm of E. A. Cummings & Co., has been with them for thirty-five years. He was president of the Chicago real estate board in 1907-08 and was fourth president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in 1912-13. He founded the national body in 1908.

Mr. Sherman has been in charge of the renting department of E. A. Cummings & Co. for many years.

Putnam Building Put in Hands of a Receiver

More trouble for the Putnam building. This is the fifteen story structure on the west side of Clark street, just north of Madison, which has been struggling for a year or more with two names and countless woes, monetary and otherwise. It was first given the strikingly original name of "The Loop Office building." Then it was rechristened the Putnam.

Yesterday, according to H. A. Winters, in the Economist, Frank M. McKey was appointed receiver for the Loop Office Building corporation, following a petition filed in the federal courts by Valentine J. Perlowski, one of the organizers and stockholders of the company. It's a long, involved story, with enough figures in it to make even a financial editor groan.

Anyway, the building is still uncompleted, only 45 per cent of the space is rented, and Mr. McKey has the pleasant task of gitting things going.

G. A. Boerste, W. C. Regelin Dissolve Partnership

G. A. Boerste has dissolved partnership with W. C. Regelin and has opened offices for himself in the Otis building, suite 1342. His telephone number is Main 1831.

MR. AND MRS. CHICAGO INVITED TO COME IN AND SEE ZONING MAPS

The tentative plans, drawn by the technical staff of the Chicago zoning commission, showing the uses to which each parcel of land in the city shall be devoted will be exhibited at the rooms of the Chicago Real Estate board, according to Charles M. Nichols, chairman of the board's zoning committee, from Aug. 24 to Aug. 31, inclusive. Members of the technical staff of the commission will be present to make explanations and receive suggestions and criticisms on their work.

CHARLES M. NICHOLS. [Moffett Photo.]

"Various meetings will be held to consider questions which are peculiar to a given locality, or which relate to some specific use of property, wherever situated," said Mr. Nichols. "These will be open to the public, and all property owners or others interested in the development of our city will be expected to give the commission the benefit of their knowledge and experience. Ladies are especially invited to attend, particularly members of the various women's organizations which have exhibited such an intense interest in zoning, both as affording a protection for the home and also as an attempt to give some relief to the crowded, unhealthful housing conditions of tenement districts."

The following schedule of meetings has been arranged:

Aug. 24—9:30, industrial division of board; 2:00, subdividers and developers.

Aug. 25—10:00, board's general zoning com.; 2:00, industrial division of board.

Aug. 28—10:00, all of north side south of North avenue; 2:00, North avenue to city limits.

Aug. 29—10:00, northwest side, east of Western avenue; 2:00, Western avenue to city limits.

Aug. 30—10:00, west side, east of western avenue; 2:00, Western avenue to city limits.

Aug. 31—10:00, southwest side; 2:00, south side, north of 55th; 4:00, south side, south of 55th.

These are the same maps which have been on exhibition at the Municipal pier during the Pageant of Progress.

More About Boulevard Lease

In reporting last Sunday in this department several leases closed by Harold H. Egan of John R. Magill & Co. in the six story building at the southwest corner of Jackson boulevard and Franklin street for the Syndicate Building corporation it was incorrectly stated that the term rental was $57,000. The leases were made for a term of years at an annual rental of $57,000.

The building, which has a frontage of 150 feet on Jackson and 100 feet on Franklin, will be remodeled prior to Jan. 1 after plans by Holabird & Roche. A new entrance, lobby will be built, new elevators installed, and the entire interior modernized.

The new occupants, who will take possession on Jan. 1, are M. Gimbel & Son, wholesale hatters, now at 132 South Market street; Granert & Rothschild, wholesale men's clothing, now at 323 West Jackson boulevard, and Mayer Bros., makers of boys' clothing, now at 509 South Franklin. Their new premises comprise the greater part of the building, and Magill & Co., the renting agents, report deals now under way for the remaining space.

Gimbel & Son have been at their present location in the Farwell block for thirty-one years, while Granert & Rothschild and Mayer Bros. have been in their present quarters thirteen and fifteen years, respectively. John T. Boddie & Co. represented the lessors.

PLANS CHAIN OF DE LUXE CASTLES FOR BACHELORS

George F. Adams Believes in Old Adage.

George F. Adams, formerly manager of the Chamberlain hotel at Old Point Comfort, and at one time manager of the Sheridan-Plaza hotel, believes the old saying, "a man's home is his castle," can be worked out in the hotel business. So recently he has let a contract with Architect J. E. O. Pridmore, and as a result plans have been drawn for "The Castle," a luxurious hotel for Chicago bachelors, work on which will start in about ten days at 4838-40 Winthrop avenue.

This will be the first of a chain of "Castles" for bachelors in other parts of Chicago and probably later in other cities.

Mr. Pridmore has designed a building involving an expenditure of about $200,000. It will contain eighty apartments, each with shower, furnished, and with service. In the basement there'll be a billiard room, a lounge room, and a barber shop and the crowning feature of all, to be modeled after the lounge of an old English inn, with a great fireplace the principal attraction.

The building will front 50 feet on Winthrop avenue, with a depth of 100 feet. The site is just north of Lawrence avenue. It will be of brick with Bedford stone trim, and part of it will have the old English half timber effect.

Bids are being taken now and Mr. Adams hopes to open Castle No. 1 around Feb. 1, 1923.

...CORMICK SAYS ...EMOCRATS ARE ...TRICKING WOMEN

...minate Them Only if Sure of Defeat.

BY PARKE BROWN.

"Where there is no prospect that a Democratic candidate may be elected to the senate, the Democratic politicians have nominated women, as in Minnesota and Wisconsin. Wherever they have believed they might elect women they have nominated men."

This is part of a letter from United States Senator Medill McCormick received by Mrs. J. W. McGraw, a leading Illinois women's organization of the Republican party, who recently wrote to the senator for a statement concerning charges of the Democratic organization that he had declared women unqualified for high office.

Explains His Remark.

Senator McCormick replied that the Democratic attack must have been based on a remark of his that he thought the women of Minnesota should not vote for Mrs. Peter Olesen, Democratic nominee for the senate. And then he gave his reasons for holding that opinion. The body of the letter follows:

"I thank you for your letter bringing to my notice the remarks unnecessarily—and the opinion erroneously—attributed to me in connection with the Minnesota campaign.

"During the course of a conversation which I presume was the basis of the misquotation, I said—as I very confidently believed—that the women of Minnesota will not vote for the woman for senator although they would vote readily for her for an office for which they considered her qualified, as she might very well be qualified by her experience to serve as school trustee.

"Won't Reject Tried Servant."

"I held and I hold that the women of Minnesota will not reject a tried, faithful, long experienced public servant who has represented the interests of the state for another senatorial candidate who has no such record of long public service and no such training as has Senator Kellogg.

"Frankly, I had not supposed that any candidate and informed person would credit me with an opinion in conflict with that which I have expressed, not by words alone but by my acts since I have been in public life. You will forgive personal reference, a good many years ago I converted my self to the view that it was not only the right but the duty of women to bear the responsibility of the franchise, of public service and of public office.

"Certain Wilsonian Democrats and some other politicians who now affect such concern for women in politics were opposed to woman suffrage or indifferent to it when I labored and voted for the Illinois suffrage bill and when I voted to send Miss Jane Addams and Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen to a national convention as delegates. In the federal service in Illinois, upon my invitation, women today hold more important positions than ever before. I think you know I contributed my part to the nomination of the women on the present Republican county ticket.

Sex Is No Bar.

"In my opinion individuals are not qualified or disqualified for office by reason of sex. It is not a qualification or disqualification for the governorship, the senate, congress, or the bench to be a man—or a woman—and yet there are some who put forward the one view or the other.

"Certain politicians, Republicans as well as Democrats, now record their confidence in the capabilities of women by speech and by empty gesture, but never by any practical action that places women in important public offices.

"Their actions are more articulate and meaningful than any words can be. They speak for themselves, and, in my opinion, the voters of both sexes will not be deceived by antics of political managers.

"Like every other man who honestly believes and has honestly labored for the full and equal participation of women in political life, I stand by my record."

50 GOLDEN YEARS

Mrs. Christen Kaad. Christen Kaad.

MR. AND MRS. CHRISTEN KAAD, 1463 North Leavitt street, will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary on Aug. 24 with a reception and luncheon at Wicker Park hall. The principal guests will be their children and grandchildren.

Mr. Kaad came to Chicago from Denmark in 1870 and his wife in 1871. They have lived here continuously since. Both were born in Slesvig (Alls) seventy-two years ago. They were married in Chicago in 1872, and for forty-one years have lived at their present home on North Leavitt street. They have been the parents of eleven children, of whom eight are now living. Their grandchildren number fifteen and great-grandchildren two. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kaad, are active and robust.

WHO OWNS SWAN ISLES? HONDURAS WANTS TO KNOW

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Honduras has taken up with the United States government the question of the ownership of the Swan islands, located off the coast of Honduras, sovereignty over which is claimed by both countries, it was learned at the state department today.

Diplomatic correspondence began actively in 1921, when Honduras organized an expedition to sail for the Swan islands to take formal possesion. On May 27, the American legation inquired of the foreign office at Tegucigalpa by what right the expedition was being organized. The reply was that it was being done by right of ownership.

On Aug. 11, 1921, the American state department suggested that Honduras refrain from taking possession pending an agreement. To this Honduras agreed. Nothing further has been done in the matter until the Central American republic, apparently tired of awaiting the next move from the United States, made the recent representations.

FALL IS FATAL.

A fracture of the hip, sustained when he slipped on a corridor floor at the Oak Forest infirmary, where he was a patient, resulted in the death yesterday of Johannes Brendesen, 76 years old, 727 Lake street, Oak Park.

ALICE GENTLE IS SPLENDID 'ZAZA' OUT AT RAVINIA

Leoncavello's Opera Is Winner Again.

BY EDWARD MOORE.

Italian music seems to be the best preservative yet found for plays that otherwise would go flabby, stale, and out of date. "Give us plots," cry the American composers, "and we'll show the world!" The Italian composers also regard plots as important, but they don't cry for them. They just reach out and take what they need, perhaps even across the Atlantic — "The Girl of the Golden West," "Madama Butterfly," and "L'Oracolo," to name a few. "What is a range of mountains or an ocean between friends?" ask the melody men of Milan, Florence, Naples, and Rome.

Leoncavallo's Magic.

"Zaza" is a case in point. As melodrama, it was "dated" and ready for the rear shelf when Leoncavallo discovered in its turgid tale of an actress-vamp, a Paris loophound, his good little wife, his nice little girl, and the squaring of the triangle a "well made play" which cried aloud for tunes, a leit-motif or two, and some orchestration. The result, when the play re-emerged from the Leoncavallo laboratory, was a good show, or at least the basis of a good show. You can, and perhaps you will say things about the score, but the opera is effective when given with care and with live personalities in the many rôles.

That is the way it was done last night, when it was returned to the Ravinia list. Alice Gentle, whose portrait of the blowsy old Anaide, Zaza's mother, has been among the foundations of her great vogue at Ravinia, was Zaza for the first time, and she made a logical success of this ample singing and acting rôle.

With one exception, all the high points of contact among the dramatis personæ were met by new members of the company. That one was Morgan Kingston, who repeated his well liked performance as the errant husband, and did well by his aria in the second act, the best melody in the score. Miss Roselle, with a week of special honors on her sturdy shoulders, acquired a fresh success as Miss Gentle's successor in the part of the thirsty old mother. Cascart was acted and sung to a nicety by Giuseppe Danise, and the rôle of Bussy also had its perfect singing actor in Vicente Ballester.

Toto Well Taken.

Aida Paltrinieri, whose father does many parts with the company, had her own attention in the child's rôle, Toto; Philine Falco, likewise, in the realistic dressing room scene as the out-vamped Floriana; Minnie Egener joined the company for the part of the maid; and there were incidents for the Messrs. Paltrinieri and Malatesta, as well as for some of the ambitious youngsters of the Ravinia roster. And Papi conducted with the zeal of a man who believes that whatever is Leoncavallo is right.

ALLEGES MATE TURNED HER INTO STREET AT NIGHT

Pressed for funds, Alvin Horner, 588 National avenue, Milwaukee, son of a millionaire farmer of Colby, Wis., sold his household furniture and turned his wife and 6 months old baby into the street at midnight, according to the story told to Judge William L. Morgan in the Court of Domestic Relations yesterday by Mrs. Florence Horner, 1053 North Lawndale avenue.

Mrs. Horner appeared before Judge Modgan seeking a bench warrant charging Horner with wife abandonment, asserting that she had received a wire from him telling her that he was going west and advising her to meet him at La Salle street station yesterday if she wished to see him for the last time.

The warrant was served on Horner as he stepped from the train and Judge Morgan set Monday as the date for the hearing of the charges.

The couple were maried, Mrs. Horner says, while Horner was in military service in Rockford and the interference of Horner's father and family is blamed by her for the wreck of their romance. Horner refuses to work to support his family, it is charged, preferring rather to subsist himself on "remittances."

Horner's father, it is alleged, gave the couple $6,000 as a wedding gift and later forced the return of $5,300 of it, when he became angered at his daughter-in-law.

Restaurant Patrons Flee Fire and Checks

Patrons fled to the street when a fire broke out over Valos' lunchroom, 753 North Clark street, last evening. John Katosules, the manager, estimated the loss at $700.

Several of the patrons fled from the place without stopping to pay for their meals, the manager moaned.

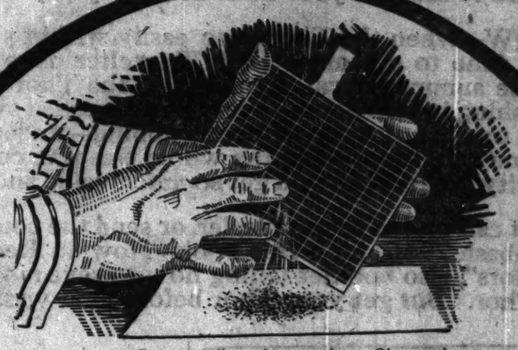
Rub a Universal plate briskly. Try to rub away its body. Not even a speck of dust on the white paper below. Long life is sure.



Rub an ordinary battery plate. Observe the dust that falls on the paper—the substance of the plate crumbling away. Short life is certain.

Universal Plates Are Hard—Hence, Long-Lived

Batteries for Automobile Farm Light Radio

Test plate hardness to know battery life. Rub a Universal plate—not a fleck of dust. Rub an ordinary plate—thickly sprinkled dust shows its softness.

It took 20 years' experience and 521 experiments to assure Universal plates their long-life-giving hardness. Thus we developed our secret mixture of red and yellow oxides, forming the body of the plate. So vital this exact proportion that a variation of 6% may mean a 40% difference in the life of a plate.

And to give added hardness, Universal plates are hand-pasted—the mixture squeezed tightly, firmly, smoothly into the grid, or frame. It is then stiffened to an almost concrete hardness by long, mild drying.

All battery plates gradually crumble away, due to chemical changes caused by charging and discharging. The harder the plate, the longer it resists decay. Hence our patient research and experimenting to assure to Universal plates super-hardness.

Yet, hard as is this secret mixture, it retains that porosity necessary to a highly efficient plate. Test a Universal plate with drops of water. They are absorbed with blotter-like swiftness. This means quick, unresisting action with the acid in the battery. More porosity means more plate surface exposed to the acid. Hence, Universal plates are extra-porous to give topnotch efficiency—extra-hard to give long life.

Charge for Service—the Square Deal Originated by Universal.

Every Universal Service Station is authorized to charge 15 cents for flushing a battery and taking hydrometer reading—25 cents for flushing, hydrometer reading, and voltage test. No tips accepted. It's a square deal for the car owner—a necessity for the battery man who wants to deal squarely. Every car owner ought to welcome and push this horse-sense principle.

Mr. Battery Man! Is Your Town on This List?

Put it there by becoming a Universal dealer. Don't give away your employe's time in free service, hoping to make your money out of new battery sales. It's poor business. Make your place a Universal station. As a Universal dealer you have the best foundation for a larger business, and the best battery service in the world to back you up. And remember, we make duplicate parts for all makes of batteries. Write for proposition.

CUBS WIN FROM GIANTS IN 11 INNINGS

ILLINOIS A. C. WINS CENTRAL A. A. U. TRACK TITLE

WINNERS SCORE 108 AND BREAK FOUR RECORDS

Jones Beats Murchison in 100 and 220.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 19.—Displaying an array of athletes who rank among the leaders of the country, Illinois Athletic club decisively defeated all opponents in the annual Central A. A. U. senior track and field championships today, staged under auspices of the Detroit News.

The Illinois club went into the lead at the start of the meet, and continued to add to its total until the finish. Twelve first places were captured by the meet winner, which scored a total of 108 points. Illinois' nearest rival was the Detroit Young Men's Order, which gathered 12 points. Detroit Y. M. C. A. was third with 9.

Four Central A. A. U. records were shattered, all of them by athletes wearing the colors of I. A. C.

Jones Sets District Mark.

Although two of his teammates made an equal number of points, H. A. Jones of the Illinois club provided the greatest thrills of the day's contests. Twice he defeated Loren Murchison, his teammate and widely known sprinter, in dashes, one for a district record.

Jones took the 100 yard dash from Murchison almost at the tape, cutting in front of the latter at the finish. Jones also took the 220 yard dash, leading all the way. His time was 21.4 seconds, two-fifths of a second faster than the former Central A. A. U. record made by S. K. Hamilton, C. A. A., Aug. 31, 1907.

Anderson Breaks Hurdle Record.

Karl W. Anderson clipped one-tenth of a second from the 220 yard low hurdle record, winning in 24.5 seconds. The former record was held by C. A. Cory of Chicago A. A., and was made in 1913. Jim Shanahan threw the 56 pound weight 33 feet 8½ inches. The former record was 32 feet 11 inches, made by Blackwood of the Chicago A. A. in 1921.

Howard B. Hoffman, former University of Michigan star, now under I. A. C. colors, hurled the javelin 184 feet 2 inches. The former record of 174 feet 4 inches was made by Brede of the I. A. C. in Chicago a year ago.

Bramwell French of the I. A. C. won the five mile race handily. Joie W. Ray won the mile run by 125 yards without undue exertion. Thomas Campbell, Yale star, won the half mile easily.

Harold M. Osborne, Shanahan and Jones were the high point scorers, each winning ten points.

IN the WAKE of the NEWS

DEMPSEY VS. BRENNAN.

THE Wake is not among those inclined to criticise Jack Dempsey for trying to get another match with Bill Brennan, whom he has already beaten twice.

True, we would expect Jack to polish off Bill more decisively than he has yet done. In the minds of most fistic followers Brennan has only an outside chance—that outside chance which ever and anon upsets the dope. Then why should our white heavyweight champ try to engage in this bout unless he is looking for something "soft"?

Look over the field of white heavyweights. They all appear soft. On the face of what happened at Toledo Brennan certainly appears a more logical opponent than Willard. Scan the field again and you find none who really seems to have anywhere near an even chance with the champion. Yet the public expects Dempsey to fight.

There is Harry Wills, you say. That is true. Dempsey must defeat Wills to convince all that he is heavyweight champion of the world. If he draws the color line we will accept his decision without criticism but denominate him "white heavyweight champion."

Dempsey says he will meet Wills. We believe him. We do not think Jack fears Wills, or any one else for that matter. The Wills match, however, is a financial plum that will grow jucier with agitation and conversation. The more the public wants such a bout the larger will be the gate receipts. While the plum is ripening Jack is heeding the public demand that he appear in defense of his title.

The Wake thinks Dempsey and Wills eventually will meet. From a financial viewpoint we think Jack is being shrewdly handled. If he be criticised for delay in meeting Wills remember he is merely following precedent. Nearly all champions have kept formidable challengers waiting while public appetite was being whetted.

The Goof Who Plays The Wrong Ball.

I'm punk on the drive; a vicious hook
Or a slice is the common reward
Of my best endeavor. I've learned to look
In the rough when I hit it hard.
You, who have known a duffer's lot,
Will be able to understand
The thrill I felt at a perfect shot,
And my joy when I saw it land
Near to the green with an ideal lie,
For a three on a par five hole.
Then this bane of golfers ambled by
Ere the pill had ceased to roll,
And disregarding my frantic yell
From afar that he let it alone,
He played my ball from where it fell
And claimed it for his own.

Luckiest Golf Shots.

Dear Wake: Friend in Manila writes that he hooked from the tee and struck a ram which was grazing in the rough close to putting green. There was a cut in the side of the ball and it stuck in the ram's wool, whereupon he drove ram toward the green. Becoming angered, and lowering his head for a charge, the ram shook loose the ball, which roled into the hole for one.

A True Story.

While driving through Lincoln park Friday the family bus succumbed to the heat and the fan went off duty, striking the radiator at every revolution. We tried to fix it, but as an auto mechanic we're a colyum conductor.

Stalled, we thought of our Chicago Motor club membership card and the vaunted service which we had never attempted to use. Telephoning the Service Dept., we were told a repair man would arrive in twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Now comes the funny part. The service mechanic arrived on a motorcycle, took out the thingamajig, tightened a loose bolt, and we were on our way just twenty-two minutes from the time we telephoned. We're convinced.

MOLLA DEFEATS HELEN MILLS TO KEEP NET TITLE

Mrs. Mallory Wins Eighth National Crown.

Forest Hills, N. Y., Aug. 19.—For the space of perhaps ten minutes today Miss Wills, a shy San Fransico miss, stood within an ace of becoming the woman tennis champion of the United States—a title of several sizes too large for her 16 years. She failed in her quest, but only because Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory, seven times national woman's champion, played her best tennis and took the title match in straight sets, 6—3, 6—1, after a bitter struggle.

The score, however, does not tell all the story. The California lass did all that she could do, all that any one had expected she would do—and just a bit more. She showed convincingly that if any one is to displace Mrs. Mallory in the next few years, it will be Helen Wills, and in the opinion of those who have watched her progress the succession will not be long delayed.

Though defeated in singles, Miss Wills did become a doubles champion, but that was due more to the efforts of Mrs. Marion Z. Jessup, Wilmington, Del., than to her own. Aside from the glare of the personalities involved in the singles, the doubles match was fully as interesting. It went to three sets and was won by the Wills-Jessup combination from Mrs. Mallory and Miss Edith Sigourney, Boston, 6—4, 7—9, 6—3.

Miss Wills Favorite.

Mrs. Jessup, short and slight, bore the brunt of the battle, and, although she made an astounding total of errors for a winner, her play in exchanges that were finished by Miss Wills was amazing. But the California girl was the crowd's favorite. This became apparent in the singles, when, urged on by the cheers of a colorful throng of 3,000 enthusiasts, she faced Mrs. Mallory across the net, challenger for the crown which the older woman had worn for years.

Spirited but cool, the youthful title seeker more than held her own in the early stages of the match. Miss Wills was confident at the start, her stroking as graceful and as well timed as in the early days of the tournament against less imposing foes. But when Mrs. Mallory realized the full danger of the menace the youthful attack failed and the champion, gaining strength as the challenger expended hers, came on to victory.

Molla Needs Her Speed.

Mrs. Mallory's style was her usual hot shot driving. She had fleetness of foot when she needed it—and she did often—but her game lacked the variety and flavor of the western prodigy, who drove across court with alternating speed, sent hight lobs to back court, and followed with whistling drives, dashing many times to the net and back to the base line.

But Miss Wills could not stand the pace. When she lost the first set she discarded her steadiness, serene control left her, and her driving became inaccurate. It was Miss Wills' inability to return those sizzling drives that lost for her. In cleverness and strategy she was the champion's equal.

The champion disclosed her unquestionable superiority in the second set, taking the first two games, losing the third, which twice went to deuce, and then winning the fourth game, 4-0.

Proud as Runnerup.

The fifth game was carried to deuce, but the effort seemed the last ounce of her strength and she was outdone when she drove the match point outside to the left of Mrs. Mallory's court.

At the end she was not a forlorn, beaten figure. Her face wore the same childish, imperturbable expression as at the beginning. She accepted the runnerup's cup as proudly as the smiling Molla took that of the champion.

JOHNNY FAILS IN SWIM MARK TRY

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Johnny Weissmuller, holder of numerous world's aquatic titles and swimming under the colors of the Illinois Athletic club, failed in his attempt to lower the mark for the 150 yard back stroke in the Central A. A. U. junior and senior outdoor swimming championships on the upper Milwaukee river this afternoon. Weissmuller formerly established the record for the distance in 1:58 1-5, but owing to the difficult course the swimmers took today, the best time he could make was 2:14 1-5.

AUSTRALIA AND AMERICA MEET FOR DAVIS CUP

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 19.—Australia's Davis cup tennis team will be America's opponent in the challenge round for the international court trophy at Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 1-2-4. The "down undere" racquet wielders earned a place in the final bracket, defeating the Spanish combination on the courts of the Germantown Cricket club this afternoon in the two final matches of the three day play. It was Pat O'Hara Wood who actually clinched the victory by defeating Count Manuel De Gomar in a gruelling five set match by scores of 6-8, 3-6, 6-0, 6-4, 6-1.

Gerald Patterson then made assurance double sure by overthrowing the ace of the Spaniards by scores of 8-6, 6-2, 6-2.

Early next month the Australian combination, consisting of Patterson, O'Hara Wood, J. O. Anderson, and R. C. Wortheim, will face the United States uqartet and thus end a cup quest that has carried them half way around the world in the last five months.

Spanish Team Threatens.

For a short time this afternoon it appeared as if Spain might halt the Australians in their efforts to regain the silver bowl donated by Dwight Davis two decades ago. Count de Gomar, playing exceptional tennis, swept through the first two sets of his match with O'Hara Wood in impressive fashion, but the fighting spirit of the Aussie was just beginning to flame. O'Hara Wood fought out every rally to the bitter end, and in the third set the tiring Castillian deliberately let the play slide, apparently depending upon the fifteen minute intermission to restore his strength enough to enable him to win one of the two remaining sets.

Wood, however, returned to the court fully as revived by his rest as De Gomar, and proceeded to play far steadier and decisive tennis than the Spaniard. He outplaced and outmaneuvered De Gomar with a variety of pace and stroking that gradually wore down the Spaniard's resistance until the fourth set was won and the fifth became a rout, De Gomar being too tired to go after many returns which he could have easily reached in the early stages of the match.

Make Good Start.

In both of today's matches the opening set went to 8—6 and in the case of the Wood-De Gomar play some of the best tennis of the day developed in this initial clash. It was nip and tuck between the pair, with Wood almost invincible if he secured a net position, but De Gomar forcing him to stay in deep court part of the time with perfect lobs and passing shots. The Spaniard played fast and furious tennis in the second set, but the heavy humidity took toll as a result of his exertions and he could not sustain what was undoubtedly a winning pace.

Much of the importance passed from the Patterson-Alonso match with Wood's victory, but some of the most brilliant tennis of the three day play developed in the final clash of the match. Patterson, who had been inclined to take things easy whenever possible, was stung into action by the determined resistance, footwork, and clever racket work of his speedy and flashy opponent.

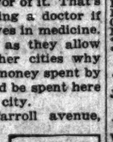
Do you approve of the contemplated renewal of horse racing at Hawthorne?

Where Asked.

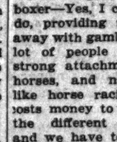
At the Pageant of Progress.

The Answers.

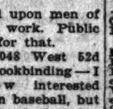
L. F. Stevens, 2357 South Michigan avenue, salesman—I used to be at the track quite often, so it is quite natural I would be in favor of it. That's like asking a doctor if he believes in medicine. As long as they allow it in other cities why not allow it here. The money spent by lovers of the track would be spent here instead of in some other city.



Bud Logan, 4258 Carroll avenue, boxer—Yes, I certainly do, providing they do away with gambling. A lot of people have a strong attachment for horses, and naturally like horse racing. It costs money to develop the different breeds, and we have to depend upon men of wealth to carry on that work. Public racing is an incentive for that.



Krank J. Pronek, 2048 West 52d place, bookbinding—I am now interested mostly in baseball, but when we had horse races years ago I saw a number of them and they were interesting and exciting. I'd like to see horse racing back again—not for the betting, but for the sport. That's my idea.



D. F. Coughlin, 610 Masonic temple, sales promotor—I do, absolutely, because it is a clean cut sport above everything else. It is a sport that has been held down mostly by cranks, and not from the principle of the sport itself. It is a sport fit for a king, the Derby being one of the world's greatest sporting events.

William F. Biohm, 2917 Logan boulevard, ignition expert—I'd like to see horse racing included among our sports again, providing they can keep the crooks out of the game. The sooner that is arranged the better it will be for baseball, also. As for betting, no man was ever forced to make a bet if he didn't want to.

New York, Aug. 19.—Miss Helen Wainwright, New York, today set an American swimming record for one mile in the national championship at Manhattan beach, negotiating the distance in 26 minutes 44 3-5 seconds. The former record, 31 minutes, 19 3-5 seconds, was made in 1916 by Miss Claire Galligan. Miss Hilda James of Liverpool, England, finished second, and Miss Lillian Stoddart, New York, third.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Old Bill Gleason threw about everything he had except the bat bag at the Yankees today, but it availed him nothing. His charges simply folded up like an accordion under pressure, and the league champions frollicked into another victory, 12 to 5. It was the fifth straight beating for the Chicago tourists.

The affair was notable for several reasons. Chief of these was Mr. Babe Ruth's twenty-fourth homer of the year, which occurred in the third inning. Next was the fact that the Yankees just about murdered three of the four Sox pitchers who faced them, and lastly, there was Bob Shawkey, the jinx, who had the Sox in a trance until his margin was so fat there was no necessity of his bearing down.

Ruth Starts Something.

Gleason's first mound offering was the elongated Shovel Hodge. Less than two innings finished him. Gorham Leverett took his place and a violent third round, which was inaugurated by Ruth's four sack clout, produced four runs. Thereafter the affair was a rout, with Harry Courtney getting most of the punishment. The one hurler who escaped was Rookie "Stubby" Mack, who worked the seventh and eighth.

Shawkey had the Sox so completely buffaloed that in six innings they touched him for only two hits. One was a homer by Falk in the second. It was a line drive past Ruth. In the seventh the Sox finally got enough hits to prove they had put in a day's work. Hooper opened that inning with a homer. Then came an error and clouts by McClellan, Yaryan and Pinch Hitter Mostil, raising the inning's count to four tallies.

Yanks in Hurry to Cop.

The Yanks lost no time in getting at the day's business. A pass to Witt and Dugan's single, which Strunk let roll through him, provided one tally in the first. Hits by Ward and Scott in the second produced another, and removed Hodge. Then came the third which Ruth opened with his homer. Three hits and a pair of passes followed, and the game was as good as over.

Leverett fell into another mess in the fifth and was yanked with two gone, the sacks jammed, and one run across. Courtney proceeded to force in a run with a pass, and then let in another with a wild pitch. Two more scored on the southpaw in the sixth, and the twelfth tally seeped over in the seventh on Mack, when McClellan made a wild throw that should have retired the side.

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

More than 25,000 fans watched the Cubs hand the league leading Giants a 2 to 1 trimming in a hectic eleven inning battle yesterday. The tail end of the Bear batting order came through with a crash, and it was the efforts of Hack Miller and Marty Krug in the eleventh that turned the trick. The fans swarmed on the field at the finish and escorted the Cub players in triumph to the clubhouse. The victory put the Cubs back into a tie for second honors with the Cardinals.

HACK MILLER. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

The combat was one of the closest and best played in years on the Cub field, and it was largely through the efforts of the mighty Grover Alexander that the Cubs were able to win out. Alex gave a rare exhibition of his prowess as a moundsman, and except for one inning in which the Giants bunched two singles and a sacrifice, had McGraw's tribe on the run.

Cubs Not to Be Stopped.

Artie Nehf, lefthanded ace of the New Yorkers, was the victim of the Cub victory. Let it be said that Nehf pitched a great game, but the defeat of Friday was sticking right up before the Bears all the time, and Killefer's Klan was not to be denied. They kept after Nehf with such persistence that he finally fell. Both of the Bears' runs were scored with the aid of two hits, but the first one was made possible by a pair of errors by Nehf and Bancroft.

Brilliant fielding and daring running catches featured the contest. Charley Hollocher, field leader of the Bears, and Ray Grimes were the outstanding performers for the victors' infield, while Hack Miller and George Maisel made great stops and catches of Giant drives that ordinarily are hits in the outfield. When it came to the Giants, Frankie Frisch, the Fordham flash, stood out head and shoulders above his teammates.

Alex Hurls as of Old.

But it was pitching that won the game. Only twice did the New Yorkers get a runner to third base. Alex was hurling in the form that first won him fame. He was hooking the ball over the corners and whipping it under the chins of the New Yorkers with ease. Nehf didn't have much trouble after the second inning until the final blows came in the eleventh. Ten hits were all the Bears could get, three of them doubles, while the Giants got to Alex for eleven safeties, which included two two-baggers.

Killefer's Klan was off in front in the second inning. Krug's single, the double error by Nehf and Bancroft on O'Farrell's grounder and Maisel's single counting a run. But the Giants tied it up in the fifth on singles by Snyder and Nehf and Bancroft's sacrifice fly. It was even up after that until the eleventh when, with one out, Miller drove a double into the crowd in right field. Heathcote was sent in to run for Hack, and Marty Krug wound up the fray, smashing the first ball for a single to left, Heathcote beating the throw to the plate by a yard.

MARTIN ARRIVES IN CITY SET FOR SCHMADER BOUT

Bob Martin, A. E. F. heavyweight champion, who will clash with Andy Schmader of Omaha, Atlantic fleet title holder, in the windup of the second day's show of Jim Mullen's four day boxing carnival, which starts at Aurora on Tuesday, arrived in Chicago yesterday and was met by several ex-service men.

The soldier champion was immediately taken in tow by his manager, Jimmy Bronson, who said the fighter will work today at the Arcade gymnasium, which will be kept open for the benefit of the many boxers who are getting in shape for the carnival. Schmader is expected tonight or tomorrow.

Advance sale of tickets indicates the heavyweight bout has met with approval of local fans, who have not seen a good match between big fellows this summer.

Martin and Schmader Fit.

From former exhibitions, the fans know when the army and navy clash something is going to happen. Both boxers are keen to make a creditable showing in these parts, and, according to their managers, are fit to step ten rounds or less at a lively clip.

Although a lot of interest centers around the big fellows, windup bouts and preliminaries of other shows are not being overlooked. The Joe Burman-Eddie Anderson contest on Friday night has its share of supporters, and many believe it will be the star bout of the carnival. Both boys are hard at work, and Burman is bent on making amends for his defeat by Mike Dundee. For that matter, Anderson was beaten by the Italian, and each will be out to redeem himself.

Mandell and Wolfe Rest Up.

Sammy Mandell and Jack "Kid" Wolfe of Cleveland, who trade punches in the banner bout on Tuesday night, will wind up strenuous work today. Mandell boxed three rounds with Bud Taylor yesterday at a lively clip, and showed he is ready. Wolfe is expected to arrive from Cleveland today.

The stockyards will turn out in force on Thursday night when Harold Smith, idol of the boys around the yards, takes on Champ Ross, a great little fighter under the management of Chick McBean. They will meet at 118 pounds.

Each windup will be supported by sparkling preliminaries. Tickets are on sale at the usual places, and the carnival will be a side issue to the central states fair, now being held.

Lynch and Dempsey in Town.

The pugilistic rialto buzzed with excitement yesterday. Aside from Jack Dempsey being in town, Joe Lynch, kingpin of the bantams, slid in with Manager Eddie Meade, and worked at the Arcade. Joe is on his way to Shreveport, where he will step ten rounds with Frankie Murray of Hot Springs on Tuesday night. Two days later he will clash with Bennie Levy at Fort Worth, and a few days later will take on some opponent to be selected at Houston.

Following these engagements, champion and manager will return to Chicago, where they will make their headquarters in the future. Manager Meade was the target for challenges. Tommy Walsh buzzed him on behalf of Joe Burman. Dick Curley wants to pit Mike Dundee against the champion if Lynch will agree to 121 pounds. Eddie Kane and Eddie Long had a few things to say about Sammy Mandell and Bud Taylor, while Pal Moore and Manager Harry Hockstadter sounded Meade regarding a match. The champion's manager asserted he will do something for the local boys when he comes back from the south.

Midget Smith Also on Hand.

Midget Smith, New York bantamweight, and Manager Harry Neary blew in from the east. Midget is slated to meet Stewart McLean of St. Paul at Eveleth, Minn., on Wednesday night. Following the match, Smith intends to stay in Chicago for a week or ten days.

Globe trotting Barney Abel, a conspicuous figure in local boxing circles for twenty years or more, is going to take another trip abroad. Barney leaves for the east today and will sail for Germany on Tuesday. Abel has enough credentials to carry him a long way without much expenditure. All the boxers and managers wished him well yesterday.

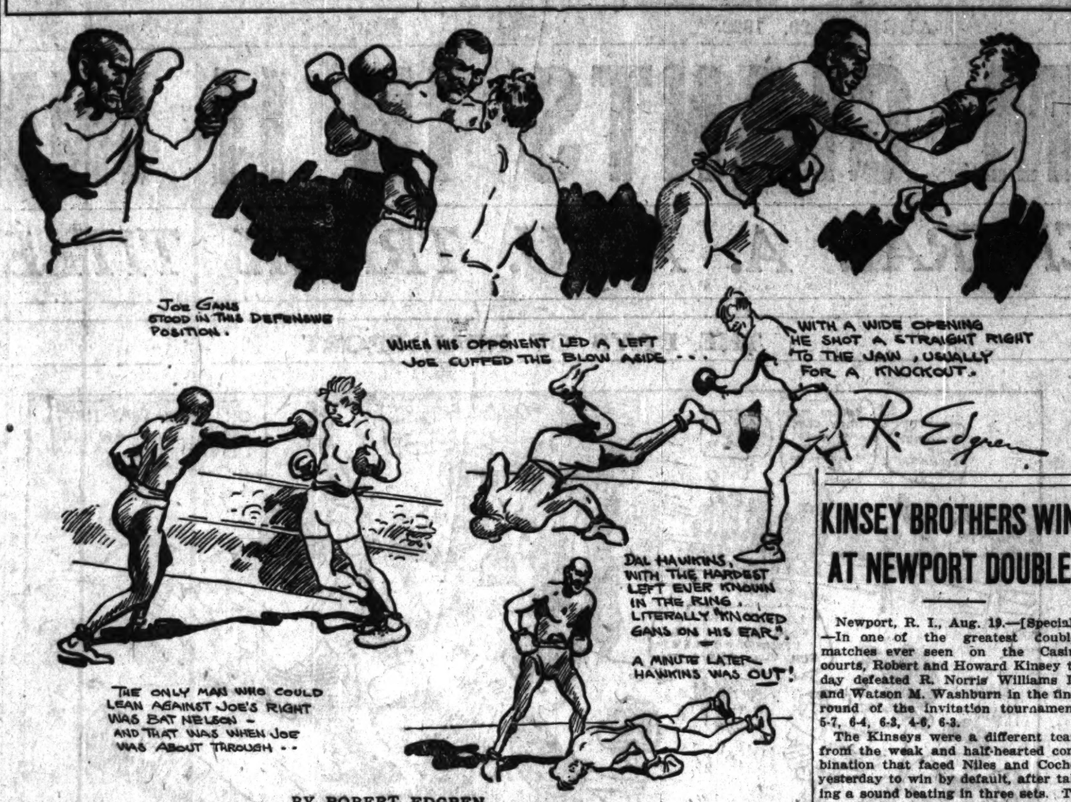
NEVER "ANOTHER JOE GANS"



BY ROBERT EDGREN.

JOE GANS never drew a $400,000 gate at any of his great championship fights. In that one particular Bennie Leonard has it over Joe. Bennie Leonard is a first class fighter and a real champion.

The more Bennie fights the more apparent it is that Bennie never was and never will be "another Joe Gans." The Joe Gans who is now only a shadowy tradition of the ring never would have fought an uphill fight half the way against Lew Tendler and worked his way painfully to the front in the latter end of a twelve round battle. Leonard is clever and can hit hard. He is cautious, sometimes, and sometimes he throws caution to the winds. He has a fighting brain. He is a student.

If it had been Joe Gans in the ring with Tendler at Jersey City! That would have been different. Joe Gans fought and beat men with whom Tendler never classed. Joe Gans knocked out Frank Erne, one of the fastest and cleverest lightweights who ever held the title, with a single punch. Gans had fought Erne years before and had lost when accidentally blinded by a wide cut over his eye. Later the two met at Fort Erie.

Gans, a Student, Wins Championship.

After the right Gans told me that he knew Erne had a trick of feinting and drawing quickly back just about twelve inches, where he would stop and come in again with a blow. The first time Erne feinted Gans hooked his right with all his power at a spot twelve inches back of Erne's chin. Erne's quick pullback brought his chin to that spot just as Gans' gloved fist arrived. A clean knockout! Gans was world's champion in the shortest championship fight on record.

That was Joe Gans—a student. When Joe began fighting in Baltimore he once went to a theater to see Bob Fitzsimmons box. He was so fascinated by Fitzsimmons' skill that for weeks he followed Bob from town to town, watching every performance and studying Bob's action.

At last he believed that he knew what Fitzsimmons was thinking while in action, although, like Kid McCoy, he told me he believed Fitz held much fighting knowledge in reserve, and that Fitz was the master strategist of the ring.

Gans went out to fight, and his success was immediate. For several years he was king of them all. There were some black marks against Joe Gans' record, but if some of his fights looked a bit shady—and were shady—he had a reason that the public didn't know.

Late in his career Gans came to me one day and said: "Mr. Edgren, you've written that certain fights of mine were fakes."

"Yes—I think they were."

"You had it right," said Joe. "But from now on I'm my own man, and I'll never fight another crooked fight." Joe made his word good.

Gans had a peculiar style. He usually stood with both forearms raised in front of him, and moved very little. He was no fancy dancer, like modern boxers, wasting all his force in foolish and unnecessary footwork. That was Joe Gans' way in the ring—except that Joe was the real master. In his poised, motionless way he waited for an attack, brushed aside blows, and when he saw his sure opening he drove crashing home the winning blow.

Gans could fight uphill. In two fights Dal Hawkins, who had the greatest left hand knockout punch I've ever seen, dropped Gans for a nine count. Each time Joe got up, steadied himself, and knocked Hawkins out! Langford won a decision over him—but who couldn't Langford beat when he was young?

The Cruel Terms Nelson Imposed.

I have little doubt Joe Gans had tuberculosis when his manager let him go. He wanted to make a stake to leave his family. He knocked out a few fighters before he met Battling Nelson. Gans had a cruel deal in that match. Nolan and Nelson haggled over weight and money, forced the champion to take a small end of the big purse, and on the last day, finding Gans had made 133 pounds stripped as agreed, insisted he must weigh in at 133 ringside in full fighting togs.

That last drying out must have nearly finished Gans, but the courage of the black champion never showed more strongly than in the terrific fight that followed.

For over forty rounds Battling Nelson, tough, tireless, punchproof, hurled himself against Gans' hardest blows and hammered at Joe's body until between rounds Joe lay across the ropes to vomit. Yet Gans pounded Nelson back until Nelson, blinded and infuriated beyond control, growing weak, too, fouled and lost.

Gans stopped Jimmy Britt, a great lightweight. In a year or so he fought Nelson again. By this time tuberculosis had laid a heavy hand on him. Yet for eighteen rounds he stood toe to toe with Nelson and drove him back with perfectly driven blows that with Gans' old stamina behind them would have stopped anything human. Nelson knocked him out, and knocked him out again a month later.

Perhaps if Bennie Leonard had the great lightweights of Gans' time to fight he might be "another Joe Gans."

But, after seeing them all, I'll say there never has been another since Joe passed along.

DEMPSEY NOT EAGER FOR LABOR DAY BOUT

Jack Dempsey, white heavyweight champion whose boxing match with Bill Brennan of Chicago in Floyd Fitzsimmons' bowl at Michigan City Labor day has been tabooed by Gov. Warren T. McCray of Indiana, broke camp early yesterday morning and came into Chicago.

The champion is eager to get back to California and unless Manager Jack Kearns springs something important upon his arrival this morning, Jack will leave for the coast tonight. Dempsey was disappointed over the action of the governor, and asserted there was no use to attempt to stage the match in defiance of the order.

Would Not Defy Governor.

"If the governor did not want us to box in Michigan City, I am glad he gave us enough warning," Dempsey said. "It would have been much worse had he waited until a few days before the contest. I believe in abiding by the law and when I heard he would not sanction it, I refused to be a party to any sort of agreement to evade the law."

It is understood Promoter Murray of Buffalo will be in town today to confer with Manager Jack Kearns, relative to taking the match into the Empire state, where boxing is permitted by law. Jack is not so eager to go through with the contest, but will do whatever Manager Kearns suggests.

Fitz Overplayed His Hand.

The governor's decision was more or less expected along the local pugilistic rialto. The general opinion prevailed that Promoter Fitzsimmons tried to stage too many big events in too short a time. If he had held only one match in which a champion had appeared, and been content with near titleholders for his other shows, the fans believe the governor would not have interfered.

It was rumored that Promoter Fitzsimmons may stage three ten round contests at popular prices on Labor day. This rumor could not be verified, but Promoter Mullen of Aurora said he will do everything possible to arrange three good contests and help in any other way to put the show over big.

Dick Howell, I. A. C. natator, romped home four minutes ahead of his nearest competitor in the first annual Pageant of Progress lake marathon swim on the north side of the Municipal pier yesterday. Stretched out behind Howell, thirty-four other swimmers made the race one of the most interesting features of the Pageant program Saturday.

Sam Greller, Jewish People's institute swimmer, followed Howell over the line, negotiating the distance in 24:50. Howell's time was 30:30. George Borst, Central Y. M. C. JOHNNY MEYERS STARTS TRAINING

Johnny Meyers, middleweight wrestling champion, who will defend his title on Labor day against Paul Prehn, wrestling coach at the University of Illinois, in one of the feature events of the labor celebration at Champaign, has started active training for the event at the Arcade gymnasium.

The champion believes Prehn is one of the toughest men in the middleweight ranks. He has met the university instructor three times, and on each occasion Meyers had to extend himself to keep from being thrown. Local fans remember Prehn's quick victory over Bennie Reuben in the Ashland boulevard autditorium, and they claim he is improving with every contest.

Meyers and Prehn are great favorites downstate, and unless all indications go astray they should put up a great bout. They will wrestle twelve rounds to a decision. Prehn has settled down to hard work in Urbana, and tickets can be secured at Champaign at popular prices.

GOSHAWK AT $50,000 TOPS RECORD DAY OF SALES AT SARATOGA

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Race horses are in prime demand, as the market writers phrase it. Just before today's races at the Saratoga race track, Harry Payne Whitney parted with another crack colt, selling Goshawk to Gifford A. Cochrane for a price reported to be $50,000, which is the highest paid for a 2 year old this year. Goshawk ran sixth in the Grand Union Hotel stakes half an hour later, in the name and interest of his new owner.

It was learned today that Whitney had refused an offer of $125,000 for the great colt Bunting, which, in his only start this year, defeated Lucky Hour. Forty-one yearlings, sold at auction at the track sales paddock last night, it was announced today, brought $414,300, an average of $4,973 apiece, believed to be a record on the American turf.

S. C. Hildreth, representing the Rancocas stable, paid the highest price, $17,000, for a chestnut colt.

Little Chief Wins Travers Stakes in Saratoga's Mud

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—On a muddy track, the result of last night's heavy rain, Little Chief, an added starter, today won the Travers stake for 3 year olds at a mile and a quarter in 2:13 2-5. Kali Sang, the favorite, was second, and Sweep By, also an added starter, was third.

Whiskaway, Bunting, and Rockminster were entries, but failed to meet the issue in what was regarded as a race for the 3 year old championship.

Zev, an added starter, won easily in the Grand Union hotel stakes, and earned $9,975 for his owner. Three lengths back came Dunlin, also an added starter, and two lengths back was Bud Lerner. Gohawk, which ran in the G. A. Cochran colors, finished sixth.

Close comparison causes the remarkable value of the good Maxwell to stand out unmistakably. It is generally agreed now that only high ideals, expressed in fine manufacturing, can produce a car of such beauty, stamina, and economy, at such a price.

WOMEN ENGAGE IN TRACK MEET AT PARIS TODAY

PARIS, Aug. 19.—By the Associated Press.]—Ready for the crack of the pistol representing America, England, France, Switzerland, and Czecho-Slovakia are on their toes trained to the last minute, for the first international track meet for women, to be held at Pershing stadium tomorrow.

The meet has aroused the greatest interest in Europe. There has been the keenest rivalry between the French, British, and American teams. The latter especially have been watched in their daily training periods at the Colombes stadium by clockers from French camps.

Their practice methods, radically different from those of the French, have been discussed lengthily in the French newspapers.

All agree that the competition will be close and lies between France, England, and the United States. The Czecho-Slovakian team may produce some surprises. Switzerland has entered in the 1,000 meters race, the javelin throw, and the shotput, and has disregarded other events.

The elimination trials will start at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The advance sale for the event has eclipsed anything yet reached in France for an athletic meet. Mrs. Millat, president of the French Feminine federation, said that she expected over 25,000 persons present, if the advance sale can be taken as a criteria of the interest created.

TO OPEN BIDS TOMORROW FOR ILLINI STADIUM

Urbana, Ill., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Bids on the new $2,500,000 University of Illinois memorial stadium will be opened tomorrow, and it is expected that the contract will be let at that time.

Under favorable conditions, it is expected by the committee that the stadium will be ready for football games in October of next year. Contracts for the purchase of the structural and reinforcing steel and cement have already been made.

At the July meeting of the board of trustees of the university, it was voted to request the legislature to provide a new gymnasium at a cost of $500,000. The present gymnasium is by far too small to accommodate the rapidly increasing registration at Illinois.

NATIONAL GRID "PRO" LEAGUE MEETS TODAY

Columbus, O., Aug. 19.—The National football league will meet in Dayton, O., tomorrow to arrange the 1922 schedule. Other matters to come up at the meeting will be the posting of $1,000 guarantee by each club, and the selection of officials.

Teams representing these cities will be present: Akron, Canton, Cleveland, Columbus, Marion, Toledo, Youngstown, and Dayton, O.; New York, Buffalo, and Rochester, N. Y.; Hammond, Rock Island, and Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Green Bay, and Racine, Wis.; Louisville, Ky.; Detroit, Mich.; and Minneapolis, Minn.

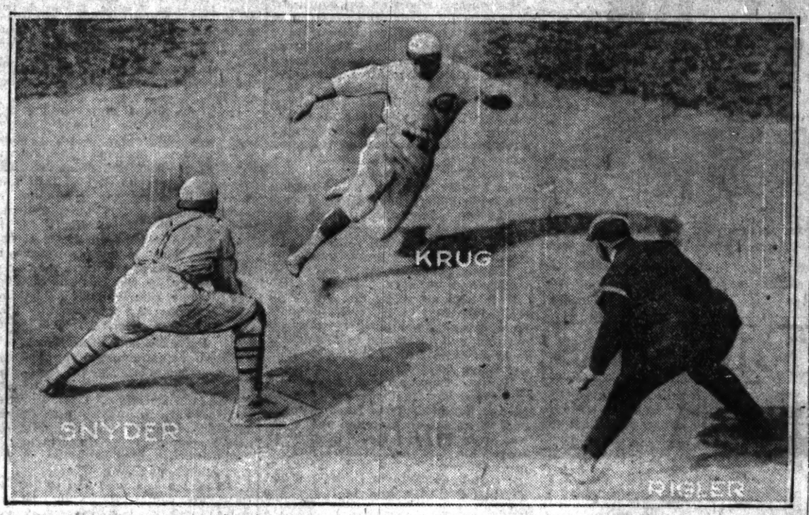
25,000 FANS JAM CUBS PARK TO WATCH THEIR FAVORITES IN CHASE FOR FLAG

Yesterday was a gala day for the Cubs' management, the Cubs themselves, and followers of the destinies of the north side team, which early in the year was relegated to a place in the second division by all but one or two sports writers. They whipped the Giants, 2 to 1, in eleven innings. The position the north siders hold today was not won by a few stars, but was gained by a well balanced crowd of boys turned into a well oiled machine by one Bill Killefer. Bill is working for the boys and the boys are working for Bill. 'Nuf said! The background of the picture shows the crowd in the bleachers. It gives one an idea of how the stands looked. In the left hand action picture Clif Heathcote is shown racing across the rubber with the winning run in the eleventh stanza. Hack Miller had sloughed a double into the right field crowd, and Heathcote was sent in to run for the left fielder. Krug didn't waste much time at bat, sailing a single to left, and fleet footed Clif hotfooted it over the pan and the game was over. In the inset to the right Frank Snyder is shown scoring the only run made off Grover Cleveland Alexander. Frank opened the frame with a double, and on a hit and run play with Nehf the catcher drew up at third and counted when Bancroft lifted a sacrifice fly to Maisel in center. This happened in the fifth inning.



Marty Krug made a hard try to score in the second inning, but was thrown out on a snap throw from Nehf. Krug was on third when Alexander hit a sharp grounder right at Nehf. Krug raced for home and made a fast slide, but Nehf tossed to Snyder, who tagged Krug out. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

CHICAGO POLICE TO HOLD FIELD DAY SEPT. 16-17

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Chicago's stalwart police force will attempt to rival that of New York and other cities in the development of athletes when on Sept. 16 and 17 mammoth field days open only to members of the force will be held in the amphitheater in Grant park. Proceeds of the two day event will go to the Policemen's Benevolent association.

EVERETT C. BROWN.

Not only is Chief Fitzmorris taking a personal interest in the event but he has enlisted the services of some of the best known athletic men in the city. With such men as Martin A. Delaney of the C. A. A., one of the best track and field coaches in the country, assisting in the arrangement of the program; Everett C. Brown, America's commissioner to four Olympic games; Joseph Hitt, president of the Illinois A. C.; William H. Powell, chairman of the athletic committee of the Cherry Circle club; William Wrigley, Maj. McLaughlin, E. C. Delaporte, Walter Wright, and many others putting their shoulders to the wheel, success of the event is assured.

Should Be Annual Affair.

An event of this sort should be an annual fixture. It has unlimited possibilities and it is an affair which the general public will support. There are some great athletes on the police force, while there are others with ability which needs to be developed. With a little encouragement, future Olympic teams may be partially composed of bluecoats from the Chicago police force.

The program will be made up of not only the regular list of standard track and field events, but there will be novelty contests of various kinds. The motorcycle cops will have an opportunity to show their skill, while the mounted police will give exhibitions of trick riding and drilling.

The committee in charge of the program is doing everything possible to make the two day event as entertaining as possible for the spectators. Enough novelty events will be listed to keep something going on at all times and to fill in when unexpected delays occur. Tugs of war, shuttle relay race, potato sprints, and many other contests of the novelty variety will not only keep the coppers busy, but their performances will entertain capacity crowds.

877 Cops Already in Training.

To date 877 policemen are training for the event in the various parts of the city. For the purpose of systematic training, the city has been divided into three sections—southern, central, and northern. The southern section includes the police districts from 2 to 15; the central, the traffic division, 1, 1A, and 16 to 21; while the northern section takes in the districts from 22 to 34 inclusive.

In order to organize and direct the teams in the various districts, Chief Fitzmorris has appointed the following captains: James J. McMahon, southern section; James E. McCann, central section; and Patrick J. Harding, northern section. S. H. Darwent, coach of the C. A. A. team, is coaching the traffic squad, while playground and park directors are heping other units.

Major Bauder, drill master of the police department, will stage a big review of all the performers to open each day's program. The parade will be led by Chief Fitzmorris, the band, and 500 uniformed police. Then will come the competitors in athletic attire. During lulls, the police band and quartet will furnish entertainment.

Fitzmorris Enthusiastic.

"We want the men to take pride in their physical fitness," Chief Fitzmorris, a great advocate of wholesome sports, said in discussing the event. "We want to bring out the best athletic talent in the department and there is no other way than by staging competitive contests. If we can get the men interested this year, the event will grow in size and interest to such an extent it will be one of Chicago's leading annual athletic fixtures."

The amphitheater will seat 25,000 people. Ticket booths will be placed at the heads of all approaches to Grant park. Winners of first, second, and third places will be rewarded with medals, while the unit scoring the greatest number of points will be given a trophy. Entries close on Aug 24, with Capt. John J. Norton. A. A. U. rules will govern.

On Sept. 16 and 17 they will be given the tests in Grant park, and the men pictured above are working tooth and nail to make the big event a success. From left to right are: M. J. Morrisey, bureau of engineers, who will lay out the field; Martin A. Delaney, manager C. A. A.; W. H. Powell, chairman athletic committee C. A. A.; John J. WESTERN OPEN GOLF FEATURE OF THIS WEEK

HOLE IN ONE

A LITTLE white sphere, propelled by a trusty mashie, left the fourteenth tee of the No. 1 course yesterday at Olympia Fields, sailed majestically down the fairway, and found the can. The achievement qualified F. O. Robinson as the latest member of the Hole in One club.

BY JOE DAVIS.

The Western Open championship starting at Oakland Hills Country club in Detroit Wednesday will be the main event of the golfing world this week, and while it is not likely that Walter Hagen, the titleholder, will be on hand, a field of good quality is assured. Chick Evans, the only amateur to ever win the title, will make another attempt to duplicate his victory.

Midlothian's nineteenth annual Pater Filius tournament, the biggest event of its kind in this country, will be played at Midlothian Wednesday when over seventy teams of fathers and sons will compete over the thirty-six hole route.

Chicago will have a number of notable pairs, including Burton Mudge and son, Ira J. Couch and son, C. W. Booth and son, J. W. Fulton and son, and Herbert J. Skinner and son. Prizes presented by William S. Furrey will be awarded to the pair having low gross for thirty-six holes. Gold medals will go to the pair having low net and they also will get possession of the famous Pater Filius trophy.

The annual invitation tournament of the Park Ridge Country club will be held Wednesday, being a thirty-six hole medal play event. H. S. Kipfer is chairman of the committee.

AN INTERESTING DEAL.

ANDERSON, Ind., contributes a deal of remarkable interest as follows: The following unusual distribution of cards was dealt and played at our club. East dealt and bid two spades, south passed, west three hearts, north four clubs, east four spades, which closed the bidding. At our table east made her bid, and the other east lost one trick. Would you kindly tell us just how the hands should be bid and played? A. R. B.

East secured 8 tricks only.

In this deal, which was a duel between east and south, exit cards were the prime factors. Knowing how to lose tricks may be even a finer art than knowing how to win them. The correct play is given below from the standpoint of the north and south players and could only be defeated by wonderful foresight on the part of the declarer, as will be explained later.

After playing the deuce of clubs and jack of diamonds, it should have been apparent to south that he must on no account be left in with his last spade and compelled to lead his horrible suit of hearts into the powerful holding of dummy. South could avoid this only by preserving a card of exit in the trump suit. How to do this is shown in the play given above; the play of the seven and eight of spades on the queen and jack led by the declarer, which enabled south to force the lead into the declarer's hand with the trey of spades, and compelled the declarer to lose three diamond tricks to north.

It should have been a very simple matter for east to secure ten tricks, unless south preserved the trey of spades. It would be impossible to defeat the declarer, however, if he were a player thoroughly conversant with the principles of cards of exit, as in that case the one club would have been trumped with the four of spades instead of the deuce. This would have enabled east to have refused to win the trey of spades and south would have been compelled to lead hearts to dummy. This play by the declarer would have been of a higher order than the first play of the trey of spades by south. In the latter case the matter of a card of exit should have been patent to any player of experience, but for the declarer to trump with the four and keep the deuce would have been a provision against a contingency which no one at that time could foresee, but for a very wise player to put himself in position to meet should it happen to develop.

OTHER LOCAL GOLF

OLYMPIA FIELDS.

C. C. Taylor, with 83, had low gross, and J. E. Byrne, 60—27—64, low net score, in the qualifying round for the Bankers' trophy, which was played over the No. 3 course.

A best ball foursome was played over No. 2. T. P. Wade and L. J. Flood winning first prize with 64, and H. E. Alexander and Dr. J. M. Dresser second prize with 66.

Second round matches in the championship flight, over the No. 1 course, resulted as follows: Ralph Hoagland defeated J. W. Stevenson, 2 and 1; Dr. A. F. Henning defeated F. T. Bangs, 2 and 1; Cal Smith defeated R. T. Wilson, 4 and 3; C. L. Cockrell defeated L. L. Hebberd, 3 and 2.

GOSSOON TAKES LIPTON CUP AFTER RACE WITH YANK

FINISH ON THIRD DAY

Here is the way the yachts finished, showing time they passed each buoy and elapsed time of each craft:

	Time.	Total.
Yank	2:05:40	10m
Gossoon	2:05:00	10m
Sari	2:09:25	10m
Colleen	2:01:00	10m
Rainbow	2:07:17	10m

BY HUGH FULLERTON.

Gossoon, leader of the R boat fleet, captured the Lipton cup championship yesterday off Belmont harbor and achieved possession of the trophy for the next year.

Losing the final race after the hardest and most beautifully fought contest of the series, Gossoon crossed the finish line nineteen seconds behind Yank, winning second place in the final race, but holding the title safely because in the three days of racing it scored two firsts and a second—20 points—with Yank scoring two seconds and a first—260 points.

Sari, the ship that was expected to win, finished third, making the greatest triumph for the Marconi rigged boats ever known in the history of the event.

No Race for Gaff Riggers.

The gaff rigger boats were supposed to have something of a chance in the prevailing weather over a quadrilateral course, but the winds remained light and shifting and the Marconis had the race all to themselves.

It was evident from the start that Gossoon was out to win three straight races—a feat never before accomplished in the Lipton cup series. And for more than half the race it looked as if it would put it over. Yank was sailed better in the final race, however, and cheated the champion out of the big honors.

The last day of the race proved to be one of the most thrilling and exciting of the series. It was again a question of seamanship and ability.

Sari First Across Line.

Sari was first across the line, Gossoon second, Rainbow third, Colleen next, and Yank last, the time being seconds apart. There was a hard beat to the northeast almost into the wind and during that leg there was a beautiful luffing match between Yank and Gossoon.

The turn of the first stake was one of the most beautiful in the history of yacht racing. The three Marconi rigged yachts had demonstrated the fact that no gaff rigger boat had a chance as they were fighting out the Lipton series by themselves.

Gossoon beat Yank around the first mark by fifty feet and the race to the second stake was a beauty. The three Marconis swung the second mark a few feet apart and Gossoon led by six seconds.

Yank Beats Gossoon In.

The tack down the third side of the course gave Gossoon a slight advantage, but it was not as well sailed on the fourth side as was Yank, which swung round the final buoy nineteen second in the lead.

Centuries Paint Touring Romance Over Southwest

Colorful Country Lures Motorists to Old Santa Fe.

SUMMER mountain playgrounds, winters on the desert, ruined cities of prehistoric man, romance of early Spanish explorations, picturesque Indian Pueblos, quaint Mexican Placitas, and with all, sunshine everywhere all the time—this is the great southwest—Arizona and New Mexico, that calls the tourist.

Here, more than 1,000 years ago, flourished an Indian civilization whose ruins are found in nearly all of the southwestern national forests, although they are most numerous in the Carson and Sante Fé forests in northern Mexico, writes Joseph C. Kircher in the American Forestry magazine. The largest and most interesting of these are the communal houses and cliff dwellings of the Rio de los Frijoles, and the adjacent Pajarito plateau, within the Bandelier national monument.

With Santa Fé as a center, and lying largely within the Santa Fé national forest, is the most interesting fifty mile square in the whole United States. Here, in addition to the prehistoric ruins, are many of the present day Indian Pueblos and it is in this region that the Spanish conquistadores established their headquarters early in the sixteenth century. Here also are mountains with lofty peaks, unexcelled scenery and clear trout streams. And everywhere, whether in mountain or desert, there are blue skies and wonderful sunsets.

Persons who desire the backwoods will find an ideal country in the Mogollon mountains on the Gila national forest in west central New Mexico and the White mountains on the Apache forest in Arizona—a wonderful mountain country with high peaks, deep canyons and ridges well timbered with pine and spruce, interspersed with mountain meadows. Streams abound with trout, while deer and wild turkeys frequent the timbered hills and grassy meadows.

Opportunities for summer vacations among mountain scenes and yet in comfort are offered by the hotels and summer camps on the Pecos river, Santa Fé forest, as well as at Cloudcroft, on the Lincoln forest (both in New Mexico). In northern Arizona the region about Flagstaff, on the Coconino and Tusayan forests also has delightfully cool summers.

Portions of the Tonto and Coronado forests of southern Arizona, because of their comparatively low elevations, have mild winter climates suitable for persons who desire winter outings among the picturesque semi-arid mountains. Within the Tonto forest lies the famous Roosevelt dam, forming a lake some twenty miles long, from which the Salt river valley secures its irrigation water.

The recreational development of the southwestern forests has not been so rapid as that in other parts of the west and this unique country is little known. A trip into it, however, will reveal a world of interesting things found only in this great land of sunshine.

Longest Milk Route.

The longest milk route in this country, if not in the world, is now using 1,500 gallon glass-lined thermos tanks mounted on trucks. It is reported that these tanks eliminate a large percentage of leakage loss. The milk arrives at San Francisco at a temperature only two degrees higher than when it was received in tanks at the cooling station, thereby keeping the growth of bacteria down.

Protect New Tires.

Never carry a new tire for a "spare!" It is a great temptation to thieves, who have enough temptation as it is. New tires immediately attract thieves, because they are much more salable than old ones. When you buy a new tire have it put on for use at once and place the old one on the spare rack. If it is pilfered you won't lose much and the thief won't get much.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

He's out to learn the truth about motordom.

The Tribune will pay $5 for questions which are accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send in your name and address with your questions to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." No questions will be returned. For today's question Richard W. Peterson, 600 Wesley avenue, Oak Park, Ill., was awarded $5.

The Question.

Should the automobile driver look out for the pedestrian, or the pedestrian look out for the driver?

Where Asked.

Jackson boulevard at Wells street.

The Answers.

Julius Braunschweig, 2035 Mohawk street, telegraph operator—Seems to me there is only one answer: Both should be on the lookout. If they would split it up evenly there wouldn't be many accidents. But the pedestrian has, in addition, to be on guard against the danger of a driver failing to stop at the officer's signal.

Jacob Rice, 317 South Market street—Both should use a little care. In France, while I was living there, the fellow that got hurt was the fellow that was punished—not the fellow driving the motor car. That wouldn't work here. Pedestrians should know that the fast traffic takes the right center of the street, while the slower traffic follows the curb. The more the pedestrians know about auto rules and customs the better for both parties.

George Zieman, 7947 South Emerald avenue, fire insurance—My boss says each should look out for the other, and I say yes to that. Many pedestrians show absolute disregard for danger, and many autoists expect the pedestrian to manage somehow always to get out of danger. They ought to put through a one-way traffic system. That would reduce the traffic on any one street from the complex to the simple, and should almost eliminate the danger of accidents.

M. Smith, 2712 North Kedzie avenue, officer stationed at State and Adams streets—Fifty-fifty—that's what it ought to be. The pedestrian generally puts it up to the autoist to look out for him. The autoist isn't always that far sighted. Another thing: The pedestrian ought to be governed by the whistle, the same as the autoist. Out of town people pay more attention to the whistle than city people.

Max Winfield, 219 West Eugénie street, chauffeur—The autoist should look out for the pedestrian, but the pedestrian should also look out for the autos, if accidents are to be avoided. The autoists should obey the traffic rules and the whistle, and the pedestrian should stop, look, and listen before crossing a street.

Gossip of the Auto Trade

H. S. HAMILTON, western branch manager for Rolls-Royce, has added a second trial car for use in Chicago following the arrival last week of T. H. Harkness, factory engineer, who has joined the Chicago office. The American branch of the famous English car chalked up a sales increase of 233 per cent during the second quarter of this year over the first quarter and is now operating night shifts in several departments of its Springfield, Mass., plant to keep up with the demand.

A novel display feature has been introduced to Motor row by C. E. Gambill, Chicago distributor for Hupp and Marmon, in a window display demonstrating recent road victories and mountain climbing achievements of the two cars. The display has called attention to the Gambill sales headquarters, 2230 Michigan avenue.

Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel company, and his associates have taken active control of the Stutz Motor Car Company of America and will operate the plant as a separate industrial unit, retaining all executives and plant men. Identification of the Schwab interests in Stutz is expected to bring a program of marked expansion following announcement of price reductions ranging from $300 to $500 on all models.

Gilbert U. Radoye has been appointed director of sales and advertising for the Haynes Automobile company of Kokomo.

A new sedan and business coupe to sell at marked reductions over last year's models are to be announced soon by the Gardner Motor company, according to advices received by O. G. Mitchell, Chicago distributor. Both models are to be typical of Gardner's advanced economy features.

The Broadway Motor Sales company entertained hundreds of patrons Tuesday at the opening of its new headquarters, 5335-37 Broadway.

Highway Phones New Tourist Aid on Lincoln Way

A NOVEL addition to the facilities provided for the comfort, convenience, and assistance of tourists on the Lincoln highway will be inaugurated for the first time anywhere in the United States, it is believed, in York county, Pennsylvania. The work of placing emergency telephones along the highway between York and Abbotstown, a distance of fifteen miles, was started recently by the Highway Emergency Service, Inc., a Harrisburg company which has the approval of the Pennsylvania highway department. It is expected that very shortly a complete system will be in working order entirely across the county.

The telephone boxes are painted black and white and are attached to telephone poles at one mile intervals. They are provided with special locks and are available for the use of motorists and others traveling the highway when provided with the proper key. A nominal sum is charged for the key, which will open all of the boxes.

The company plans to change the lock each year, thus necessitating a new key from each tourist who wishes the service.

The arrangement is planned so that a motorist need never walk more than half a mile to communicate with any kind of help needed. Contracts have been arranged with satisfactory repair stations and garages so that they will answer all calls coming from these boxes day or night.

The company making the installation along the Lincoln highway as a test of its popularity contemplates the same installation between Harrisburg and Lancaster and will push the installation along other important roads in Pennsylvania as fast as conditions will permit until the entire state is covered with a network of highway emergency telephones.

Save $14,000 a Year.

The officials of the Union Transportation company of New Jersey estimate that they will save nearly $14,000 annually through the substitution of motor rail car equipment for a steam locomotive and railroad cars.

Illinois Highway Program Wrecked by Double Strike

300,000 Road Workers to Lose Jobs in Shutdown.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

STRIKING miners and railroad shopmen in Illinois have succeeded in wrecking the biggest public improvement program in the state through the practical closing down of construction work on 1,000 miles of new paved roads. In Cook county all highway construction work will cease in less than ten days if the slump continues, and nationally more than 300,000 workers face the loss of their jobs.

The Illinois situation is particularly discouraging, according to state authorities, because the program was halted exactly at its peak of progress and when the work promised completion of the vital thousand miles for use this winter. Curtailment, due to the strikes, came when contractors all over the state were laying a high average of forty-one miles of new pavement each week and were working toward a construction record of fifty miles a week.

The early opening of mine operations in the state will not materially relieve matters because priority orders have been placed on open coal cars for the exclusive movement of coal and it will be impossible for the remainder of the season to move a sufficient supply of gravel, sand, and other materials to the new roads.

"The slump is certainly a bitter disappointment to this department as well as to every road user in the state," said Superintendent of Highways Frank Sheets, in command of Illinois forces. "We are trying to be as optimistic as possible and are using every facility left to keep the work going, but the strikes have crippled our program beyond repair for the season.

"Every barrel of cement used on the roads requires 200 pounds of coal at the cement plant and the plants are entirely out of coal. The Mitchell mill is closed, Indiana mills are nearly all shut down, LaSalle mills are badly handicapped and the one Universal plant that has been kept running closed today, Saturday. The interstate commerce commission has placed movements of open cars to cement mills near the bottom of the preferential list, despite the vital highway building work which they make possible and, in addition, we are finding it almost impossible to secure cars for the movement of the little cement we can secure. Thousands of men employed on state jobs have already been laid off and our hope of constructing fifty miles of new highways each week has gone glimmering."

In Cook county less than ten days' supply of materials are on hand for any job and a number of contracts are already suspended. County highway officials have used every means at hand to keep the work moving, but expect operations to cease in a week unless strike relief comes.

Charles H. McDonald, chief of the United States bureau of public roads, who inspected the famous Bates experimental road near Springfield last week, reported the same strike tieup of the national highway program. Road work in the east has ceased, he said, and the middle west and west are facing an early shutdown.

In a recent survey made by Raymond Beck, chairman of the touring and highway committee of the National Motorists' association, and submitted to C. C. McChord of the interstate commerce commission, it was found that 40,000 men have been thrown out of work to date through the strike curtailment of eastern road work. A total of 300,000 men are engaged in national highway construction and they, too, expect to be laid off within a week.

In urging a revision of commerce commission rulings on rail movements good roads authorities have pointed out that the country's highways will be called on to carry the entire transportation burden in the event of a general rail strike. At present the rulings are said to ignore the real importance of road improvement.

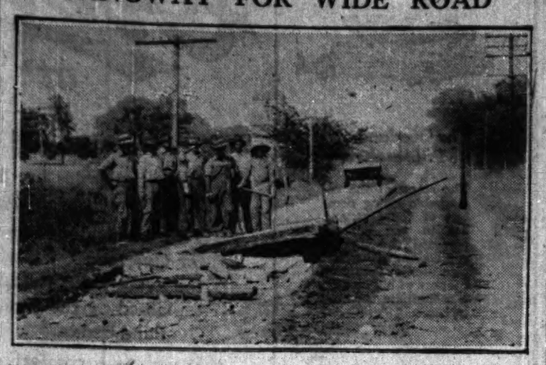
Light Danger Point.

Five large electric lights are soon to be installed along the concrete road which comprises a part of highway 10, two miles south of Stevens Point, Wis., by the town of Plover. They will be put in at a place where the road crosses two bridges spanning the Big Plover river and then makes a turn over a hill. This will be done to make the highway less dangerous. Residents of McDill, where the lines for the electric lights will be put in, will be able to obtain light and power for their homes.

YOUNGEST FAN.

Jackie Coogan, the youthful motion picture player, has a specially-built passenger automobile, costing $10,000.

GANGWAY FOR WIDE ROAD



Ten years ago central Illinois good roads men contributed the money to build the first concrete highway near Shirley. Eight feet of pavement was then considered ample to carry the traffic. Last week state crews, pushing the 300 mile paved boulevard from Chicago through Bloomington to St. Louis, swept the old road aside to make way for the eighteen foot ribbon which will soon be opened between the two cities.

Billion Dollar Trucks

The motor truck industry has reached the billion dollar class and the output is said to be breaking all records. The annual expenditure for trucks and commercial cars is about $1,000,000,000 made up of 250,000 new trucks of all sizes being made in 1922, worth $250,000,000, and an investment of $750,000,000 for maintenance and operation of the 1,050,000 trucks now in operation.

The Commercial Car Journal says the average truck runs four times as many hours and travels twice as many miles as the average auto, hence the average truck consumes about twice as much material as a passenger car.

The annual auto bill of the country is set at $4,000,000,000, of which about one-fourth is the purchase price and the upkeep of trucks.

Break State Record.

With sixty-five inspectors stationed at the various materials plants that are turning out materials for Illinois hard roads, the amount of concrete inspected has reached its maximum for the year, according to the state highway division.

In June about 390,000 barrels of concrete were inspected for use in Illinois. This is approximately one-third of the amount inspected in the whole of 1921. More than ninety plants are now furnishing materials for Illinois highways, and, the department says, a record of output will be recorded for this year.

An Invitation.

An autoist, after being held up by highwaymen, beaten, robbed, and left along the roadside, upon recovering from his experience, found himself sitting opposite a sign which a nearby town had put up and which read: "That You—Come Again."

Ancient Timber Tract Opened by New State Road

Builders Lay Boulevard Through Illinois Game Preserve.

BY E. E. PIERSON.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Aug. 19.—[Special.]—Through the heart of Funks' grove, the last remaining expanse of timberland in central Illinois, graders for the "Illini boulevard," to connect Chicago and St. Louis with an eighteen foot band of concrete, are blazing their way. This stretch of the 300 mile highway will be the most picturesque. For several miles the road will extend through dense woods, left undisturbed since the first coming of the white settlers just one hundred years ago.

This wilderness, in its many thousand acres, approaching a jungle in density of trees, bushes, and vines, will afford a pleasing contrast to the fields of corn and other grain which extend for mile after mile in the journey downstate and which, in their fertility, have made Illinois famous for its agricultural riches. The farms which flank the road on either side for nearly the entire distance between the two great metropolitan cities of the Mississippi valley rank as the finest in the world.

The old highway, which has been used by the vehicles of central Illinois residents for the last century, swings to the east and around the grove. To promote safety, reduce mileage and cost of construction, the engineers drew their plans for a road that extends without curves or detours, straight as the crow flies, between Chicago and St. Louis. This rule forced the construction of a new right of way, midway through the forest, and necessitated the felling of thousands of trees, many of them monarchs of the wild. Walnut, oak, and maple in heavy growth, many of them dating back to the period when the red men roamed this section, have fallen before the ax of the graders.

Through the center of the grove winds the stream known as Sugar creek, which approaches the proportions of a river during the spring freshets. The new highway will cross this stream.

The new state road is practically completed between Chicago and Bloomington, or will be by winter. The grading for the remaining sections between Bloomington and St. Louis is now under way.

At Shirley, six miles southwest of Bloomington, the graders have torn up a mile and a quarter of eight foot concrete roadway, laid ten years or more ago, the first in central Illinois. This was constructed by private subscription. The new boulevard to succeed this primitive strip will be 18 feet in width, with a 13 foot shoulder of soil to flank the concrete.

Based upon an average cost of $30,000 per mile, the Illini boulevard will require $9,000,000 to build.

These acknowledged facts vividly confirm Type 61 Leadership

MUSTER a few of the facts that stamp Type 61 as a fine car, then see if you do not agree with its owners that the new Cadillac is an outstanding motor car value.

In the first place, you know that Cadillac has had the advantage of twenty years experience in building exclusively one quality car.

You know that out of its unique experience Cadillac has evolved a standard of craftsmanship and precision manufacture that could scarcely be arrived at in any other way.

You are aware that the Type 61 Cadillac, built in accordance with these precision methods, is declared by European and American engineers to surpass all previous Cadillac records for dependability.

Indeed, many critics go even further in their admiration of the new Cadillac, and agree almost unanimously that Type 61, in beauty, comfort, power and all-round perform-ability, is the Standard of the World.

The public, itself, in conclusive confirmation of this verdict, registers its approval of the new Cadillac by buying more Type 61 Cadillac cars than all other cars combined selling at the Cadillac price or higher.

These things are not alone our testimony—they are the acknowledged facts, and as such are of peculiar importance to buyers of high grade automobiles.

We believe that almost every individual, after careful consideration, will understand the justice of the majority decision; that Type 61 Cadillac is both the Standard of the World and the world's greatest motor car value.

FARM AND GARDEN

Wise Exhibitors Know Judges Want Normal Vegetables

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

DEFEATS in the showroom are in a large percentage of cases the result of gardeners picking out all the monstrosities and giants in their gardens and displaying them in competition with wise exhibitors who know a good judge wants normal sized vegetables. Perfect, averaged sized specimens, not freaks, are the kinds of vegetables that win at county fairs.

Lack of understanding the qualifications of show specimens has caused many farmers and truck growers to become discouraged after the first showing and it also keeps some of the best growers from being prize winning exhibitors. A successful grower may be a poor exhibitor, while the small gardener may be only a fairly good grower but successful in showing his products.

Selecting the Specimens.

Study the fair catalog and find out what the class requirements are; then select specimens accordingly. Live stock exhibitors know that a dairy cow would be disqualified in the beef cattle classes. The same principle applies in exhibiting vegetables.

In the catalog of the Great Chi-Cook fair, which is to open next Saturday, prizes are offered for individual vegetables, such as the best watermelon, the best muskmelon, the best pumpkin, the best squash, the tallest stalk of corn, etc., and in all of these classes it is only necessary to consider the points that make a first class exhibit. In selecting specimens for group exhibits the problem is different — uniformity is of paramount importance.

Judges Dig to Bottom.

The best results in making good group exhibits are obtained when three distinct selections are made—one in the field, another just before starting for the exhibition hall, and the third when the exhibit is placed on the table in the showroom, according to C. E. Durst, director of the fruit and vegetable department of the Illinois Agricultural association. This calls for a fairly large collection of vegetables in making the first selection. Sort out the high grade individuals that are in excellent condition in making the second selection and allow enough for a fairly wide latitude in making the final selection.

Harry W. Day, assistant farm advisor of Cook county, emphasizes the importance of uniformity in group exhibits and urges truckers and gardeners to pay particular attention to size, shape, color, and degree of ripeness. It is a common fault among farmers, he says, to select particularly large or highly colored specimens even though others cannot be found to match them. Difference in degree of ripeness is a good reason for discarding some apparently choice products.

Facing a basket with high grade, uniform potatoes or tomatoes, for instance, with inferior tubers or fruits in the bottom would cause the exhibitor to lose with a discriminating judge. Most judges dig to the bottom of the basket.

Damaged Material Worthless.

Exhibition material should be as free as possible from worm holes, disease spots, rots, bird picks, and bruises. Roots of root crops should not be broken or cut off; stems of eggplants, peppers, watermelon, squashes, and pumpkins should be left attached, while those of tomatoes and muskmelons should be removed.

Have the specimens in good condition at the time of judging. Melons and tomatoes, for example, should be ripe, but not overripe; green vegetables should be fresh and crisp, and root crops must not be shriveled.

Quality, condition, and stage of ripeness should be normal for the variety at the time of the year it is shown. A competent judge would not expect late celery to be in prime condition for eating the latter part of August—the time the Great Chi-Cook fair is being held—and he would probably give the prize to specimens which are green at the time they are exhibited.

First Impression Lasts.

The first impression of the gardener's display when the judge walks into the exhibit room is lasting and makes it advisable to group the vegetables so they will be shown to the best advantage. Blemished may be only temporarily hidden, for the wise judge usually examines all specimens.

A scrap of soiled paper used in labeling exhibits has no doubt caused exhibitors to lose. Label plates and baskets neatly—it pays. Dipping the baskets or wooden plates in pink, blue, or green dye is a cheap and an effective way of improving the appearance of an exhibit.

Arrange the vegetables so they will be in terraces, and match them so their colors will not clash. The whole exhibit may be greatly improved by framing and decorating with goldenrod, foxtail, asparagus tops, and thistle flowers.

Garden Notes

Tomatoes and cabbages pulled through the hot weather during July in fair shape in most Illinois gardens. The crop report shows both of these crops to be above the average. In several localities the onion crop shows an average prospect. The weather was so dry it was unfavorable for the development of bulbs.

Peaches are now coming on to the market from southern Illinois orchards. This is the first time members of the Illinois Fruit exchange have attempted to market fruit under the newly adopted trade name, "Illini."

Several county fairs are to be held in Illinois during the next few weeks. Gardeners should start planning their exhibits and selecting their best specimens for the display immediately.

Outfits that have been used in spraying gardens and orchards should be cleaned up thoroughly and stored as soon as the season is over. Horticulturists at the Iowa station use a mixture made of one can of lye and a gallon of lubricating oil. This is put through the spray pump to remove the materials and preserve the metal parts.

Don't pull all the good ears in the roasting ear patch—save some for seed. A good time to look for sweet corn seed is while you are gathering roasting ears.

Talking Farm Finance.

Business men throughout the middle west are reaching out their hands to meet the farmer half way in the general problems that are to be solved in agriculture. Through the chamber of commerce at Sioux City, Ia., they are inviting 150 farmers from the territory surrounding Sioux City to be their guests at a meeting next Friday. Farm finance will be discussed by J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau federation.

Over the Top.

F. H. Norman of Macy is the first farmer to enter hogs in the ton litter contest started last spring by the Indiana Live Stock Breeders' association. The day Mr. Norman's litter of eleven Chester white pigs were 6 months old they weighed 2,610 pounds. At the end of five months they weighed 2,050 pounds—the first in Indiana to go over the ton mark in the contest.

American Team Wins Live Stock Judging Contest

THE international championship and world honors in live stock judging were won by America's team that captured Lord Northcliff's cup at the recent English Royal show at Cambridge, England. The American boys, George M. Worrilow, Warren W. Rice, W. C. Snarr and Joe Glacken, all from Maryland, surprised the British youngsters with their skill and alertness.

GEORGE M. WORRITOW.

A government official from the department of agriculture and a representative from the Maryland Agricultural college accompanied the team. Trips of this kind made by students in agriculture are considered of great importance to those who are looking toward the improvement of America's livestock in the future. Not only are these young Americans exchanging ideas with the farmers of Europe but they are making a careful study of the finest herds and flocks that can be found.

WARREN W. RICE.

Before going to the battlefields of France, the team visited the homes of the Berkshire hog, the Southdown sheep, the Guernsey, Jersey and Ayrshire cattle, and other breeds of stock common in the United States.

W. C. SNARR.

The contest is regarded as the beginning of many friendly battles in arenas of this and other countries. Realizing the importance of such contests to encourage the breeding of better live stock, B. H. Helde, general manager of the International Livestock exposition, has invited the British team to come to Chicago's great show next December, when they will have an opportunity to test their ability as judges in competition with the best boys' and girls' teams in the United States.

JOE GLACKEN.

Guy H. Hall of the National Institute of Progressive Farming is planning an international contest that will bring to the judging ring boys and girls from Canada, Brazil, Great Britain, Australia and South Africa, with Europeans, South Americans and North Americans meeting for the world championship in live stock judging. Stockmen believe friendly rivalry will do much to educate the world in progressive farming methods and aid in a closer relationship among the different nations.

Beeman's Buzzings

Bee keepers in central Missouri are following in the footsteps of Cook county in the orginization of all farmers who keep bees in that section. This is done for the purpose of improving honey yields. To bring all the modern advantages to the farmers a pooling of equipment has been proposed, a new development in the field.

More attention is being given each year to the kinds of feeds and the methods of feeding that can be most successfully used by apiarists in winter. Iowa apiarists say that tests show that when feeding syrup is composed of two parts granulated sugar and one part water by weight, the amount of ripened stores resulting is approximately equal to the weight of sugar alone, when the feed is given after brood raising has ceased.

Fruit Yield Good.

There has been a fairly heavy movement of apples and peaches on the market during the last few weeks, and crop reports from Springfield show that tree fruit crops are favorable and of good quality. Home grown watermelons and cantaloupes are being pulled by the car loads over the state. The quality is good, but the yield is being cut by the dry weather.

Dairymen's Jottings

Dairymen have always wondered if the green scum that forms on watering tanks in summer is poisonous or not. It is not, in itself, harmful but may catch and hold dangerous microbes, according to Kansas agricultural college authorities. When this scum forms on the water they recommend that the tanks be emptied from time to time and scrubbed with a 5 per cent solution of blue vitrol. This treatment may kill the green vegetable growth.

American dairymen are producing 90,000,000,000 pounds of milk annually. Much of it is going to waste because farmers have not learned to use the surplus milk during the heavy producing season.

WESTCOTT PARKING

OTHER CARS OF EQUAL SIZE

3 Feet less PARKING SPACE REQUIRED

Westcott requires a seven-foot shorter turning space than the average for other cars of the same wheel base.

This enables the driver to park with one back in a space three feet shorter than needed for other cars of equal length. It will park in practically the same space needed for cars of 110-inch wheel base. This saves bumps and mars and lengthens the life and good appearance of the car.

Short turning radius and surprising ease of handling is accomplished by the Ball Crank Tie Rod and the U-Bar drag link. Ask to see them.

Closing cattle values were highest of the year, while hogs finished the week at practically lowest prices since January. Sheep and lamb trade improved, due to very limited supplies compared with recent years. Best steers reached $10.95, and the average moved up 25c to $9.80 for good beef steers. Saturday's hog market ruled steady to 15c lower, with day's average $8.10 and top light $9.65.

Unusually large receipts of hogs for this season of the year featured the live stock trade last week, the numbers totaling 90,000 more than the ten year average of the corresponding week since 1911 at 134,300, against 111,073 previous week and only 67,829 corresponding week of 1917. Estimated average weight last week 255 lbs, equaling heaviest week of the year and 12 lbs heavier than the ten year average.

There was a general narrowing in the price range of hogs last week, the top dropping 15c below the previous week, while the average moved up 25c to $8.75, being 50c below a year ago and $3.25 lower than the ten year average of corresponding week since 1910.

Hog Supply Is Large.

Eleven markets last week received 480,000 hogs, being unusually large for this season of the year and 130,000 more than the fourteen year average for corresponding week since 1907. Arrivals previous week totaled 456,000 and a year ago 419,000.

Receipts for next Monday are estimated at 19,000 cattle, 38,000 hogs, and 22,000 sheep, against 24,586 cattle, 42,070 hogs, and 32,616 sheep corresponding Monday a year ago. Next week's estimated reciepts: 57,000 cattle, 125,000 hogs, and 35,000 sheep, against 49,702 cattle, 111,462 hogs, and 123,631 sheep a year ago.

Probable receipts of hogs for Monday range from 32,000 to 47,000. George Chandler estimated 32,000; Edward Morris, 33,000; Felix Gehrmann and E. S. Waterbury, 35,000; E. R. Gentry and W. H. Overman, 37,000; F. R. Burrows, 38,000; John T. Brown, 40,000; J. M. Waters, 44,000, and F. W. Waddell, 47,000.

NEWS OF THE CROPS

George M. Le Count, the Stein, Alstrin & Co. crop expert, after an extended trip through the Canadian northwest, estimates that the three provinces have secured around 227,000,000 bu wheat. This compares with the Canadian government August estimate of 298,000,000 bu, and final returns of 280,000,000 bu last year. He looks for the Canadian farmer to sell wheat freely because he is hard pressed for money and thinks the early market is best. The movement to terminals will probably exceed the immense total of last year.

Austrian government cannot obtain sufficient foreign exchange to finance its purchases of foodstuffs and raw materials, and importations are becoming difficult.

Owing to the shortage in wheat in France the government has decided that mills must obtain a larger amount of flour from wheat, and a milling basis of 80 per cent will probably be enforced, compared with an average of 72 per cent. Certain substitutes may be used.

Outlook for the new wheat crop in Australia is maintained. Swedish wheat and rye crops are poor this year. Hailstorms have done considerable damage to crops in parts of France. English wheat crop in many districts is much below that of last year.

This Company supplies substantially all of the electric light, heat, power, and traction services for the 800,000 busy and prosperous people of the Greater Milwaukee district. It is the largest public utility company in Wisconsin, and one of the strongest in the United States. Its business grows steadily from year to year. This growth necessitates the investment of $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 of new capital each year, under strict State supervision. A well settled State policy permits the Company to earn a yearly profit of 7½% to 8% on the State-appraised value of its property, which exceeds its total outstanding capitalization by approximately $3,000,000.

The Company obtains most of this new capital each year by selling its preferred shares, as approved by the State, directly to investors. It has more than 20,000 well satisfied Wisconsin investors, of whom 15,000 live in Milwaukee, with hundreds in other States. During its 26 years in business this Company has paid every obligation on the due date, in full. During the 22 years last past it has earned and paid preferred share dividends regularly every three months. During the 20 years last past it has paid common share dividends every year at an average rate of 8%. Dividend dates on these shares are March 1, June 1, September 1, and December 1.

The price of the 7% preferred shares now on sale is $100 each. You can buy them for cash, or on monthly payments of $5 per share. Purchased on either plan, every dollar invested earns 7% for the investor from the day it comes into this business. We do not recommend these shares as a speculation. Under State regulation the business is limited to a fair yearly profit. We do recommend them as a thoroughly safe permanent, income investment.

Mail orders addressed to our SECURITIES DEPARTMENT, Public Service Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis., will be filled promptly by registered letter. A Circular containing complete information of the Company's affairs will be sent on request.

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

Trading in local unlisted securities embraced a wide range of stocks, and while price changes as a whole were small, a materially better tone marked the entire list. Butler Brothers, after making low sales of 38¾, advanced to a close of 39¾ bid, 40¼ asked. Burroughs Adding Machine improved to sales at 144, but was later offered at this figure, with buyers at 141. Borden's Company common stock was somewhat easier at 102 bid, 105 asked.

Packard Motor at 14⅜ was up half a point; preferred improved $1 at 85¼ bid, 86⅛ asked. There were a few reported sales in Paige-Detroit at 20¼ bid, 21½ asked. Motor Wheel was offered for sale at 13⅜, with little interest on the buying side. Ford of Canada relinquished some four points to sales at 368. Stearns was fractionally lower at 20½ bid, 21¼ asked. McCord Manufacturing common continued weak, closing at 4½@5, off ½ point. A good demand for Goodyear Tire and Rubber issues forced the common from 8 to 10@11. The preferred improved $3 to 30@32.

Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes was wanted at 41½, with odd lot offerings at 43. Some few transactions in Chicago Railway Equipment were reported between 165 and 170. Bucyrus common was off 1 point at 20¼@22; preferred also suffered a 1 point loss at 93 bid, 95 asked. Interstate Iron and Steel preferred was traded in between 65 and 67. The sugar issues were neglected and prices generally unchanged.

On a light volume of trade public utilities, with few exceptions, advanced to somewhat higher levels. American Light and Traction at 138@139 showed a gain of $7. American Gas and Electric common was traded in between 157 and 160. Adirondack Electric preferred improved 1 point at 93 bid, 95 asked. A good demand developed for Cities Service common, and the market on this issue advanced from low sales at 183 to a close of 192 to 193. Bankers shares sold at 20½—up 1½ points. Northern States Power common was quoted 89@92, preferred 91@93—with few reported sales. Little interest is manifested in local bank stocks.

Don't Be Stampeded by Market Slump.

A great many investors make the mistake of thinking, when the market price of a security they are holding drops off a few points, that their investment is in danger. Many a good investment is sacrificed when its owner becomes alarmed and sells on a falling market. Of course, a considerable fall in the market price of a security may indicate a weakening in the factor of safety in back of it, and the investor who follows the market quotations should immediately undertake to inform himself as to the cause of the decline. The strength of the best securities may become altered owing to changes in the company's prosperity or prospects, and it is the part of wisdom to watch carefully the affairs of the company whose securities one holds. But, as the market price of any given security seldom remains the same from day to day, the mere fact that a security has dropped a few points does not necessarily mean that it is a less safe investment. Various elements enter into the fluctuation of market prices. Supply and demand; manipulation of the market by speculators; liquidation by large holders who are converting their securities into cash; news of political or financial changes which may have some effect on certain industries—these and many other elements are factors. Often the prices of securities rise or fall in sympathy with some other securities in similar or even different industries. Such are the rising or falling markets—usually spoken of as "bull" or "bear" markets—wherein securities all along the list will rise or fall in sympathy.

The investor should learn to differentiate clearly between an investment and a speculation. If a security is bought for speculation it means that the holder bought it with the intention of realising profit by selling it later at a higher price. To the speculator, then, the market price is of prime importance. If, however, the security is purchased as an investment the holder bought it with the intention of holding it until maturity, or for a long time, for the purpose of receiving a steady income from it in the form of interest or dividends. In such a case changes in the market price from day to day in no way lessen or increase his assurance of a steady income and the investor should not allow himself to be stampeded into disposing of a sound security simply because it declines a few points on the market. For the investor it is more important to follow closely the affairs and condition of the company whose securities he holds than to follow the market quotations.

BREAK IN WHEAT, PRICE FALLING BELOW A DOLLAR

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Both cash wheat and futures broke below $1 in Chicago yesterday and the inside prices were well maintained to the last. Liquidation and hedging pressure, with a lack of support, carried values off quickly and at the last futures showed a net loss of ⅞@1⅛c. Corn was affected by further rains in the main belt and lost ⅛@⅜c, while oats were unchanged to ⅛c lower and rye ⅛@⅜c lower. Lard finished at a decline of 2½@5c and ribs were 7½c lower.

Grain prices were on the downgrade the greater part of the week and while coarse grains showed resistance to pressure toward the last, wheat finished with net losses of 2⅝@5c. Corn was 16⅛c higher, oats ⅛c higher, and rye 20⅜c lower. Lard finished with losses of 5@25c and ribs 20c.

Bearish Market in Wheat.

Overnight developments in the wheat markets were almost entirely of a bearish character. In fact there was practically nothing on which to pin faith in an upturn in values. Liquidation was on again in Liverpool with a decline of 1⅜@2¼d, and further weakness was shown in continental exchange. Estimates on the Canadian crop are being revised upward and now center around 325,000,000 bu for the three provinces, or 25,000,000 bu more than indicated by the last government report.

Week end evening up and short covering furnished the bulk of the support, although there was some buying by the seaboard. Northwestern houses sold May, which was attributed as hedging for Minneapolis mills who were accumulating big lines of cash spring wheat on account of the prospective scarcity before another crop is harvested. Red winter sold below $1 for the first time this season and some stop loss orders were uncovered in futures on the way down.

Corn Favored in Spread.

Spread operations between wheat and corn, the latter being bought, prevented it from showing as much weakness as wheat despite the rain reports from various parts of the belt. The May wheat and corn difference narrowed to around 49c at one time, compared with 53½c a week ago. Country offerings were not large. Forecast was for generally fair and warmer, and there was a disposition to go slow on the selling side in some quarters.

Oats held within relatively narrow limits, but averaged lower with other grains. Greater part of the business represented spreading between the various deliveries.

Rye declined in sympathy with wheat. Northwestern movement continues heavy.

Weakness in Liverpool and scattered selling made a lower range for provisions. Cash trade rather quiet. Packing of hogs at Chicago for the season to date aggregates 2,998,000, against 2,531,000 last year. Prices follow:

RAILROAD NOTES

Officials of railroads operating east from Chicago and St. Louis reported fairly satisfactory loading conditions in spite of the strike of the shopmen and notwithstanding the coal strike. Total traffic showed a little falling off, as was to be expected, as industries are being crimped for lack of adequate fuel supplies. General merchandise is moving in liberal volume, and there is a good run of grain from the farms. Officials of southern roads say that the movement of wheat to the Gulf is running smaller than a year ago. Cotton movement is only fair, but there is a large tonnage of lumber and roads expect to soon be busy hauling coal. Generally, outside of the coal, tonnage compares well with a year ago.

The Gulf, Mobile and Northern railroad applied to the interstate commerce commission for authority to purchase and consolidate with its own road the entire holdings of the Birmingham and Northwestern. The larger company proposes to complete the transaction by issuing $300,000 new capital stock and by acquiring 2,090 shares out of a total of 3,000 shares in the corporate organization of the smaller road. The Gulf line application explained that through the Birmingham and Northwestern it could obtain direct connection with the Louisville and Nashville and Illinois Central systems, thus gaining facilities for handling traffic and cheapening its present coal supply. By a second application the Gulf company asked authority to issue $750,000 in first mortgage 4½ per cent bonds to pay off existing indebtedness.

The Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad asked the interstate commerce commission for authority to issue and sell $747,000 of first consolidated mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, the proceeds to be used in retiring $371,000 of first mortgage 6 per cent Jasper branch bonds and $376,000 first mortgage 6 per cent Centreville branch bonds.

Statistics recently made public by the interstate commerce commission show that the railroads in May had 1,628,226 employés, an increase over the month before of 50,095, or 3.2 per cent. The total compensation paid the employés totaled $216,672,028, representing an average wage for the month of $133.07 per employé.

At a meeting of the board of the Grand Trunk railway system, M. D. Robb was appointed ranking vice president of the company, with the title of vice president and general manager. Mr. Robb will take up the duties of Howard G. Kelley, whose resignation as president of the railway is announced.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

A lowering of wheat prices to below those of early in the week made the trade relatively more bearish and induced over selling. Covering in the last few minutes made a rally, but the trade expects lower prices, notwithstanding the fact that cash wheat is selling below $1.00 for No. 3 red for the first time this season and May wheat is the lowest for August since 1915, when it sold at 95¾c. The trade is looking for increased receipts, which will take a greatly enlarged buying power to absorb.

There was fair buying of September and December wheat by the seaboard on the break against export sales, which was easily satisfied. Northwestern hedges were active on the selling side and stop loss sales from 99½c down for September were a feature. December touched $1.00⅛ and May was down to $1.05¾.

Corn is looked upon as more of a two sided proposition. Scattered reports from Nebraska suggest considerable damage in the western sections. Temperatures have been as high as 104 at Grand Island the last week and 100 to 102 at numerous points, with 101 at Hastings. Some reports from west of Hastings say that corn has been badly damaged by the extreme heat.

Commission houses were large buyers of December corn around 52¾c to 53c, starting a covering movement which carried prices to the highest of the day at the last. The corn market is regarded as more of a two sided proposition. A good decrease in stocks is expected and cash boldings in store of the largest interests are practically cleaned out.

"In view of the fact that the amount of wheat on ocean passage, also the world's available supply are considerably smaller than last year," says Thomson & McKinnon, "the continued and pronounced weakness in Liverpool is strongly indicative of the present and future buying power of importing countries. So far as prices of the future are concerned, it is not a matter of volume or freedom of offerings, but is entirely a question of the purchasing power of buyers."

Kansas City grain men predict a flood of wheat as soon as the railroad strike is adjusted. Sidetracks and elevators are full of wheat and the southwestern people are laying special stress on the southwestern, northwestern, and Canadian crop moving at about the same time.

FINANCIAL NOTES

With coal prices in some bituminous fields advanced to $4.50 a ton, an advance of 75 cents over the recent high price and $1 a ton above the war time peak, interests in the steel trade see nothing ahead but higher prices for finished steel. During the last week there was an advance of 84 cents a ton in the average price of eight leading products. The gain over the low point of February is equal to almost $6 a ton. In pig iron it is more than $7 a ton. Steel producers point out that because of the uncertainty in connection with future costs they were unwilling to accept a large amount of business for future delivery.

In connection with the recent rise in Standard Oil stocks, carried out in connection with stock dividend rumors and predictions of increases in crude oil prices before the close of the year, a new crop of rumors got started during the closing days of the week. One rumor is that the New Jersey company, through the Humble Oil and Refining company, will take over and develop about 800,000 acres of land in Texas belonging to the Houston Oil company.

Indications that the railways of the country are preparing for an unusual demand on their facilities in the fall and next year, as a result of widening business activities, are seen in the report of locomotive buying during recent weeks. According to figures just issued, orders for about 300 engines were placed with locomotive builders in this country between the last week in June and the first week in August, of which all but about thirty were for domestic business. In the entire year of 1921 domestic orders covered only 230 engines. It is understood there are inquiries for several hundred engines now in the market and it is expected that domestic orders by the end of August will scale around the 1,000 mark.

Since the dip in Liberty bonds of approximately 15 per cent from par, during the course of liquidation when the securities were freely offered, there has been a constant and steady demand for the government issues from banks. The situation may be ascribed to two causes; first, the desire of the institutions to keep in their own portfolios securities which are absolutely safe and which return a good yield, yet whose prime attribute is fluidity; second, the belief that an appreciation in market value was to be expected. Figures compiled from the statements of 800 banks, including leading institutions in every federal reserve district show that on January 4, holdings of United States government bonds totaled $650,000,000 and that on August 9 they amounted to $1,300,000,000.

Bankers in touch with the international situation do not place any special significance on the resumption of gold exports from England to the United States last week further than the fact that they probably are additional shipments to aid the British government in its fall maturities here. The Aquitania brought gold valued at $2,500,000 to J. P. Morgan & Co. and $1,715,000 to Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Unfilled orders of H. B. Mallinson & Co., Inc., on hand Aug. 1, showed a gain of about $3,000,000 over the same date last year. The mills are running better than 85 per cent of capacity and are sold up to the end of October on most numbers.

The New York Times.

New York, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—In the absence of any fresh news, either from the labor negotiations or the railroads controversy, today's weekend markets held steady, with prices for nearly everything on the stock exchange at least fractionally higher and a few rather noteworthy recoveries. The railway shares led the day's advance, several of them advancing one to two points.

It is a survey of the course of prices for the week as a whole which is most apt to impress the mind, in view of the changes in the public's mood last week. Advances of 3 to 4 points have occurred in a long list of shares, conspicuously of the railway group. Values recovered during last week as a whole, even in the market for European government bonds, and the rise in domestic securities, was general.

Foreign Exchange Easier.

Foreign exchange was slightly steadier today; even the mark regained a good part of Friday's decline. The reichsbank's weekly statement as of Aug. 15 shows further increase of 6,800,000,000 marks in the paper currency, which now, at 204,800,000,000 marks, is double the amount outstanding at the beginning of last December and nearly three times the sum afloat in May, 1921.

Even from German financiers one now begins to hear the assertion, familiar in the breakdown of every such experiment, that the trouble really is not too much paper money, but too little for the needs of trade. There has possibly never been an episode of the kind in history in which at its beginning it was not hard for prices to keep pace with the currency inflation and in which at its end it was not even more difficult for inflation to keep pace with the rise of prices.

New York Deposits Decrease.

A decrease of $26,874,000 in demand deposits, an increase of $5,478,000 in time deposits, an expansion of $3,398,000 in loans and discounts represented the principal changes in today's weekly statement of the New York clearing house banks. Surplus reserve fell off $1,380,460. Details of the statement are as follows:

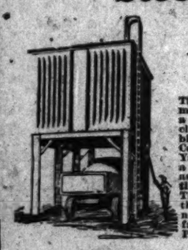
Steel Bins!!



For Sand, Gravel, Coal, Cinders, Etc.

$595

The steel bins we illustrate herewith measure 10 ft. x 12 ft. x 15 ft. and have a capacity of 70 cubic yards. Truck clearance is 10 ft. as illustrated. These bins are particularly adapted for Road Contractors, Material Yards and Coal Yards. The photograph indicates what a great time and labor saver they are, as trucks can be loaded in a very short time and eliminate double handling. Their portability is an added feature, as they are all bolted together in the field, no Rot rivets being required. They are far superior to wood which soon decays. Price F. O. B., Chicago. 3506.

Structural Steel!

We have large quantities of plates, ¼ inch and heavier, also round bars in all sizes. We can make you quick deliveries.

We have 7,000 Diamond Checkered Floor Plates, measuring 3-16 inch by 2 ft. x 4 ft., which we are quoting at a special price of $2 per plate.

We have a full stock of I beams from 3 inch to 24 inch; angles from 2 x 2 to 6 x 6; channels from 3 inch to 15 inch, which we will cut to length and deliver to site in the City of Chicago or surrounding territory.

Guaranteed Heating Plants!

EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS

Buy your heating plant while material is plentiful and prices very low. Avoid the Fall scramble with its high prices, material shortage, and uncomfortable delays. A rough sketch of your building is all we need to give you complete information. Expert heating engineers will assist you in selecting the correct heating system for your building and show you how to install it in the most economical way. At a very small rental charge we will furnish you with all necessary tools to do the work.

The Secret of Beautiful Hair

How Movie Stars Keep Their Hair Soft and Silky—Bright, Fresh-Looking and Luxuriant

STUDY the pictures of these beautiful women and you will see just how much their hair has to do with their appearance.

Beautiful hair is not a matter of luck, it is simply a matter of care.

You, too, can have beautiful hair, if you care for it properly. Beautiful hair depends almost entirely upon the care you give it.

Shampooing is always the most important thing.

It is the shampooing which brings out the real life and lustre, natural wave and color, and makes your hair soft, fresh and luxuriant.

When your hair is dry, dull and heavy, lifeless, stiff and gummy, and the strands cling together, and it feels harsh and disagreeable to the touch, it is because your hair has not been shampooed properly.

When your hair has been shampooed properly, and is thoroughly clean, it will be glossy, smooth and bright, delightfully fresh-looking, soft and silky.

While your hair must have frequent and regular washing to keep it beautiful, it cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps. The free alkali in ordinary soaps soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why leading motion picture stars and discriminating women, everywhere, now use Mulsified coconut oil shampoo. This clear, pure and entirely greaseless product cannot possibly injure, and it does not dry the scalp or make the hair brittle, no matter how often you use it.

If you want to see how really beautiful you can make your hair look, just follow this simple method:

A Simple, Easy Method

FIRST, put two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water. Then wet the hair and scalp with clear warm water. Pour the Mulsified evenly over the hair and rub it thoroughly all over the scalp and throughout the entire length, down to the ends of the hair.

Two or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather. This should be rubbed in thoroughly and briskly with the finger tips, so as to loosen the dandruff and small particles of dust and dirt that stick to the scalp.

After rubbing in the rich, creamy Mulsified lather, rinse the hair and scalp thoroughly—always using clear, fresh, warm water. Then use another application of Mulsified, again working up a lather and rubbing it in briskly as before.

Two waters are usually sufficient for washing the hair, but sometimes the third is necessary.

You can easily tell, for when the hair is perfectly clean, it will be soft and silky in the water, the strands will fall apart easily, each separate hair floating alone in the water, and the entire mass, even while wet, will feel loose, fluffy and light to the touch and be so clean it will fairly squeak when you pull it through your fingers.

Rinse the Hair Thoroughly

THIS is very important. After the final washing, the hair and scalp should be rinsed in at least two changes of good warm water and followed with a rinsing in cold water.

When you have rinsed the hair thoroughly, wring it as dry as you can; finish by rubbing it with a towel, shaking it and fluffing it until it is dry. Then give it a good brushing.

After a Mulsified shampoo you will find the hair will dry quickly and evenly and have the appearance of being much thicker and heavier than it is.

If you want to always be remembered for your beautiful, well-kept hair, make it a rule to set a certain day each week for a Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo. This regular weekly shampooing will keep the scalp soft and the hair fine, and silky, bright, fresh-looking and fluffy, wavy and easy to manage—and it will be noticed and admired by everyone.

You can get Mulsified at any drug store or toilet goods counter, anywhere in the world. A 4-ounce bottle should last for months.

What a Child's Hair Needs

CHILDREN should be taught, early in life, that proper care of the hair is essential.

The hair and scalp should be kept perfectly clean to insure a healthy, vigorous scalp and a fine, thick, heavy head of hair.

Get your children into the habit of shampooing their hair regularly once a week. Put two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water. Then wet the hair and scalp with clear warm water. Pour the Mulsified over the hair and rub it in vigorously with the tips of the fingers. This will stimulate the scalp, make an abundance of rich, creamy lather and cleanse the hair thoroughly. It takes only a few seconds to rinse it all out when through.

You will be surprised how this regular weekly shampooing with Mulsified will improve the appearance of the hair and you will be teaching your child a habit that will be appreciated in after-life, for a luxurious head of hair is something every man and woman feels mighty proud of.

HOW'S THIS FOR AN UNUSUAL PANAMA CANAL PICTURE? Besides the remarkable panorama, it shows the battleships Delaware and North Dakota side by side in the locks. They are vessels of about the same tonnage and size. (Photographs from Wide World.)

Black Tom Grogan had always been known as a square man, and he wouldn't shirk that. Instinctively he knew that all the forest people would approve of the rough and direct justice of his plan. If only the sheriff would let him be! Well, let the sheriff come and find him. Gradually he fell into a doze, and finally slept while all the warm eager life of the woods, drenched in April sunshine, went on about him.

When he woke the sun was low, and immediately he set about his preparations for the night. He blew up the little fire, carefully building it so that it would burn slowly and steadily, using chunks of white oak and hickory. He let down his birch bark pail and got a supply of water. Then with the blankets spread he was ready for the night. After sunset he prepared and cooked his supper, which he ate in the red glow of the burning logs. He smoked a long and meditative pipe before turning in, and at the end carefully arranged a pile of slow burning logs on the fire so that it would keep all night. As he lay stretched in his blankets he felt the comforting glow of the fire reflected upon him by the back logs. The only sound was the gentle crackle of oak and hickory and the shrilling of a colony of peepers in the pond nearby. Listening to these he fell asleep and did not wake until sunrise.

While he was eating breakfast he heard faint sounds from the direction of the lumber camp. He could hear the men calling to their horses as they drove away. He knew the camp was being closed up. Charlie Wood had told him they would all be leaving on Wednesday. This gave him a cue to the day it was, which he had forgotten. Yes, it was Easter week, and he, Tom Grogan, had killed a man. He might have known. * * * Yes, things like that happened when there was bad whisky about. He wished he was a teetotaler like his father. * * * Well, it was too late wishing that now. The thing was done. * * * He heard the last man drive away. It was a lonely thought, but perhaps he would be all the safer. It gave him the idea of going on a trip himself. Yes, it would be pleasant to climb the mountain and wander in the wilderness beyond it to the east, which he hadn't explored for several years. After the meal he quenched his fire, placed his blankets and grub, took the rifle, and went.

FOR two days he was almost completely happy. His senses, far more highly developed than those of the average man, were as so many more windows through which the light of nature shone on his soul. He saw adventures, happenings, dramatic episodes, where to another there would be but dark and silent woods. He visited Beaver Pond, and creeping up with infinite care saw the dear and desirable beasts at their secret work. He surprised a lynx which was trailing him, and, turning, stared into its fierce, round whiskered face until it leaped away into the woods snarling. On Dead Water Brook he found the slide of a family of otters and watched them with delight through a long, warm afternoon. Several times his fingers crept to the rifle, but he found he could not spoil that little play without spoiling his own day. As he was coming slowly homeward towards the end of the second day something happened that unexpectedly cast a shadow on the outing. He had run out of meat and had determined to shoot a chipmunk or squirrel. The opportunity came as he sat idly on a log a few miles from camp. A confiding chipmunk appeared on a branch a little ahead and chattered violently at him. He raised his rifle slowly and shot it. The little creature leaped out and then convulsively crumpled up on the ground. He went and took it up, realizing with surprise that the shot, which was a good one, had given him no pleasure. It was just another thing he'd killed. It made him think of Gallagher. Stubbornly shaking off this thought he went towards the camp.

As he surmounted the ridge he smelled at once the pungent smell of forest fire. From a high ledge he saw a wall of smoke over the woods down toward the lumber camp. It relieved his mind when he decided after careful inspection that the conflagration had not spread from his fire. Some one at the camp must have been careless, and it didn't take much carelessness to start a fire in woods which were cut over. The great piles of dead branches the lumbermen left invited a fire. He hastened down to the camp, built his own fire and cooked supper. He couldn't stop the forest fire and it would pass him by below. The fire warden would see the smoke and they would have a gang of men up. It meant he would have to move over the ridge.

After supper he took steps to protect his little shelf from the advancing flames. He cut down the small trees that grew along the little ravine. Probably the fire would burn out soon. The worst fires didn't come in the spring. Still this dry weather was more like autumn than spring. And if the flames got into the dense belt of pines between the camp and Gallagher's it might get bad. He was tired and turned in early.

Some time in the middle of the night he woke up. The pungent smell of smoke was in his nostrils, and smelling it he jumped up, thinking the fire was on him. It was passing by but the dense smoke was being driven north and east by an uneasy wind. A crackling roar came from the woods below, and, looking down, he got glimpses of fervent ruddy flames as some great old pine went roaring up to the black sky. The fire was passing him going north. Unless the wind shifted the woods would be burned down clear up to Lost Pond. Suddenly he thought of Ellen Gallagher and little Mary. They would be right in the track of the flames. As he stood uneasily the wind raised its voice and went mournfully northward. It was rising. He could hear the flames respond to it in increased menacing crackling roar.

"Look, Look!" screamed Mary.

Hastily he laced his boots and got ready to go. He let himself down over the cliff in the dark, and, guided by glimpses of flame, made his way northward, hoping to run around the right flank of the fire and cut down to the Gallagher cabin. After walking for ten minutes he found he was too late. The fire was ahead of him everywhere. He was cut off from the house. Nevertheless, he laid his course straight towards it and traversing the blackened forest floor ran towards the roaring wall of flame ahead. It grew hot underfoot. His shoes began to grow warm, and then a blast of the heat from ahead struck him in the face. He went on just the same, running obliquely to find a gap in the burning woods.

THE smoke and noise of the conflagration awakened Ellen Gallagher as it had awakened Tom. She knew nothing of the fire, having only come home to pack up her things after the funeral of Gallagher. She found the house full of smoke, and, going to the door, saw with terror a great wall of flame advancing towards her. With a scream she awakened little Mary, and the two dressed with feverish haste. Trembling with anxiety she snatched up a few precious things and wrapped them in a bundle. All the while the little girl was sobbing in terror. The roar of the flames grew louder. The distracted mother took hold of Mary's hand and went to the back door. "We must run, child," she shouted.

"Look! Look!" screamed Mary pointing through the front door, which faced the south.

A gigantic blackened figure was leaping across the yard. Burning rags hung to it. Smoke came from its feet. It was Black Tom Grogan, now black, indeed, his hair and beard half burned off, his flesh tormenting him in every part. He leaped across the door sill and snatched up Mary. "Come on, Ellen," he shouted and darted through the north door. Ellen ran after him. Already the flames had passed the house to east and west and these they must outrace if they were to live.

"Put me down," cried Mary; "I'll run, too!"

Black Tom put her down, gave her a hand, and the three fled north, followed close by a wall of roaring flame.

At dawn the scared animals, which had fled to the shores of Lost Pond for refuge, were frightened still more when they saw three human beings stagger through waves of heat and come out on the beach. Without a moment's hesitation Black Tom lifted the little girl in his arms and waded into the lake. The woman followed. At last they stood with only their faces out of water, except when a blast as from a furnace drove them under. There they waited for many hours until, when the sun was high and the fires had long passed by, a daring search party found them and helped them towards an automobile.

"Don't touch me! Don't touch me!" cried Black Tom as they came up. And then he fell like a log. Ellen knelt by him weeping. "He's burned alive!" she cried. "Look at his poor flesh!"

AT the company hospital two hours later the doctor administered a merciful opiate while they stripped him and put healing things on his burnt body. When he came to he was lying swathed in bandages. He looked along the ward, choking down a groan as he felt the fire on his limbs. A Sister was slowly traversing the room. At each bed in a glass vase she left a lily, tall and lovely. She saw a puzzled question in Tom's eyes. "Easter morn," she said gently, and then, "Black Tom, you are a hero. We are all proud of you."

"Proud of me," mumbled Black Tom through cracked lips. "Me! Don't you know? I killed Gallagher!"

"Wait," answered the Sister, smiling. "Some one is coming."

He couldn't turn his head and so waited, staring painfully upward. He heard the Sister whispering. Suddenly he saw Ellen Gallagher and Mary. They were dressed in clean, fresh garments, and there was no sign of fire on them.

"You saved us, Tom!" cried Ellen. "We owe our lives to you."

Black Tom looked at her. Conflicting emotions struggled in him. "If only I hadn't killed Gallagher," he cried, "how fine it would all be."

Ellen laid a hand on his pillow. "You didn't kill him," she said. "He died of heart failure, as they found when they brought him here. There was but a small hurt on his head."

Black Tom stared at her. Regardless of his aching body he lifted himself up on the bed. Suddenly joy flooded in upon him. He forgot his pain. "Thanks be to God!" he cried. He looked out on the world with new eyes. It was all joy. It was Easter! Suddenly he understood what Easter meant; he understood the solemn miracle of resurrection; he felt in the human heart what he had seen taking place in the spring woods as one of the mysteries of nature.

"No, Tom," called the Sister approaching. "You'll kill yourself. You must lie down. We're going to leave you, so you can sleep."

"Come soon," he called eagerly to Ellen as she turned to go. "An' don't worry. When I'm out of here I'll see that you don't want. You have no hard feelings, Ellen have you?"

"I have none, Tom; how could I?" she answered. "See, it is Easter morn. Good-by, Tom. We'll see you soon."

She turned, followed by little Mary, and walked out of the ward. The Sister arranged his pillows and gave him a sleeping draft. Black Tom thanked her and then turning his head so that he could see the slender solitary lily, he gazed at it as he would at something holy, until the blessed gift of sleep took him out of his pain.

Aladdin's lamp in his pocket—$10,000. Comforting thought!

Behind him stood The Shadow, smiling tolerantly. The poor boob didn't know what to do, eh, or which way to turn? It was a great temptation to offer the hick some friendly advice, but the professor had banned any such Samaritanism.

Seeing an opening, Bancroft strode forward resolutely, The Shadow at his shoulder, ready to give him a friendly shove if he hesitated. The worst thing that could happen to the Great Adventure Company would be the accidental bumping off of Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft. Lord, what a monicker! Sounded like one of those oofty-goofs that got into the Sunday supplements for nothing. And Jeremiah his middle name, too! The passage was made in safety, however. But as Bancroft started to mount the hotel steps, The Shadow slapped his hand to his forehead.

"Holy smoke! I'll have to witness this, whether he pipes me or not. They'll give him the air with a springboard. O, the poor hick!"

Black Tom Grogan

by

Brian P. O'Shashain

"Gallagher's Dead," They Said. "We've Come to Warn You." And So He Fled to the Heart of the Woods and to—What?

BLACK Tom Grogan shoved his chair back and stood up. He threw his cards on the table.

"I quit," he said.

The other players regarded him with some surprise. He returned their looks defiantly. He remembered that a moment later, and all that his eye saw—the rough kitchen table lit by the swinging lamp overhead. The square of light illumed the little living room of the Gallaghers, with its chinked logs. An iron stove, damped up for the night, still gave out a little heat; the mountain air of the north woods was sharp after sunset. Behind the stove slept a shaggy dog, a collie that was Mrs. Gallagher's pet.

Gallagher, a sour looking man who sat at Grogan's left, regarded him with disfavor.

"He quits," mocked Gallagher. "Th' little lad wants to go home!"

Black Tom Grogan felt a hot resentment at the insult. Gallagher had picked on him all through the game. "I'm quittin' because I'm broke," he said, "an' I won't sponge on me friends like some I knows!"

He stared down at Gallagher, who now suddenly pushed his chair back and got up. The players were forgotten as the ancient and primeval drama was reenacted. In the little cabin under the quiet light the two men suddenly became savages. They looked at each other malignantly. Black Tom Grogan in corduroys and flannel shirt towered up to his full six feet. His great mop of black hair cast a shadow over a primitive face such as one often finds in Connaught. Mike Gallagher was a stouter man and shorter, with ruddy face and reddish hair. He wore an old blue work shirt crossed by stout suspenders.

Hot words passed between them. Gallagher swayed a little as he talked in a hoarse monotone, pouring out abuse on Grogan. In the center of the table, impassive now and forgotten, stood a tall bottle, which, lighted from above, cast a squat shadow. Glasses and cups stood about it, some half empty, some turned down on their rims. Cries of protest rose from the players and chairs were shoved back as some got to their feet. They were too late, for suddenly the two men struck out at each other violently. Then a stream of life and fire seemed to animate them. They leaped in and away and in again. All the men jumped to their feet alarmed, but indecisive. The combat had broken out so suddenly that no one was actually prepared to intervene. However, calls, cries, and protests were heard, but above these came the smacking sound of fists thudding on flesh and the rush of feet over the board floor. The two big men circled and spun and ducked.

"Stop it!" called Jim Farrell, advancing. "Stop it! Ye'll wake Mrs. Gallagher an'——"

Even as Farrell spoke he saw that something had happened to Gallagher, who was lifted from the floor and flung bodily backward. He went down with a crash that shook the house. The irons rattled on the stove as his head hit it. A small shower of soot dropped down out of the misplaced stovepipe. The fight stopped as suddenly as it had begun. Black Tom Grogan, standing in the center of the room, started down at the huddled man on the floor. How had it come about? He hardly knew.

Like so many happenings in his life, the fight had come on him suddenly, and he had acted without knowing why.

"His head hit the stove. They'se blood on it," called Farrell from where he knelt by the fallen man.

"The missis is coming down," warned another voice. Farrell rose and came to Grogan, taking him by the arm. "Ye'd better go now," he said. There was a murmur of approval at his words. Grogan was led to the door, pushed out, and the door was closed behind him.

After an hour's walk he approached the lumber camp and at last saw its light through the trees. There was a pungent smell of lumber which permeated the forest at this point. Crossing the yard, he pushed open the door and entered. The men were asleep, as he could hear. He sat down on the edge of his bunk, took off his shoes and clothes, and turned in. A moment later he was asleep himself.

IT seemed as if but a minute had passed when some one was shaking him. Thinking it was the cook rousing him up for breakfast, he rolled out half dazed and reached for his clothes. Suddenly he saw that it was Farrell with another man who had been at the card party. He stood up.

"Come outside," whispered Farrell. Without a word, wonderingly, for childlike he had forgotten the events of yesterday, he followed them. Farrell led him a few rods from the house and spoke abruptly. "Gallagher's dead," he said. "We've come to warn ye. None of us think you're to blame beyond bein' drunk. But if they'se trouble ye'd better take to the woods."

Black Tom stared at the dim figures before him. Dead! The word shocked him into instant apprehension, but he found it hard to believe that he, Tom Grogan, had killed a man. The three stood in awkward silence. About them spread the first faint grayness of the dawn.

Farrell was speaking again. "Just tell us where ye want grub brought and we'll see ye're taken care of. How about the Flat Rock at the lower end of Lost Pond?"

"It'll do," mumbled Grogan. His mind was far from grub. Farrell shook his hand with a gesture of confidence and understanding. "It wus an accident, Tom. We all understand that. We're as good as any jury—so go and take care of yerself." The other man shook his hand quietly and the two were gone. Black Tom stood for a minute indecisive. The outlines of the trees had now become half definite. It was that mysterious half hour when night is slowly changing to dawn.

At last he heard a sound from the bunk house, and went in and dressed. Jacques, the cook, was up, already humming a little song from Quebec while he blew up the fire, and the other men were stirring in their bunks. Stalwart legs were thrust out, and the lumber jacks with yawnings and mumblings awakened each other and put their limbs into garments that hung on a row of nails. They began to talk to each other a little and to go outside, where the splashing of water in tin basins was heard.

Black Tom was usually pretty silent in the mornings. They knew this and left him alone as usual. Within half an hour the seven men were sitting down to breakfast, and Jacques was gaily flipping pancakes over the stove. It was the cleanup of the lumber season. They were men who had been left there under Charlie Wood to set things to rights before closing the camp. They were having a pretty good time together and Charlie didn't rush them. They ate with good humor, jollying each other while they swallowed enormous quantities of flapjacks, bacon, and fried potatoes. One of them, an oldish bent man with a wrinkled, pathetic face, said little, but his lips moved now and then and he murmured words to himself.

Larry Dolan was well known among the forest people as the lumberjack who openly said his prayers. Sometimes rough fellows had ridiculed or mimicked him. This was thought bad taste and bad luck by most. Larry never resented it. His life already turned inward. His rough companions knew that every man must approach the mysteries after his own fashion. Larry ate slowly and thoughtfully. The whole cabin was presently permeated with the aroma of coffee. Gradually dawn stole in and put out the light of the swinging lantern. The men stretched their legs under the table. Long arms reached out. They grabbed or passed the butter, sugar, maple sirup, and pancakes.

Black Tom talked a little carelessly. He was mentally figuring out how much of an outfit he would need to take to the woods. He did not regret having to go. It would be a pleasure. Only he didn't like being alone with the thought of having killed Gallagher. That wouldn't be good. Still, what had happened had happened. He was sorry. He would make amends if he could—somehow. In the back of his mind half obscure was a grave pagan sense of the inevitableness of the thing that had happened. To him it seemed of a piece with other tragic happenings—the tree that fell on Jerry Doyle last year, crushing his life out the week after he was married. These were things inexplicable—events that must perhaps ever remain in shadow, mysteries to human sense. A Canadian had once said to him, pointing up: "Ze man above—he knows why."

Black Tom's mind, perfectly healthy, was trained by circumstance to accept what had happened and to meet with calmness the thing to be done. Breakfast over, he took the boss outside and arranged to leave, telling him nothing of the reason. The men had gone out to the stable to hitch up the horses, and while they were there he swiftly gathered his outfit together, got some grub from Jacques, packed it, and with a word to Jacques went out of the cabin and took the trail toward Lost Pond.

The little lake was three miles on the other side of Gallagher's. He did not, however, return on the woods road that he had walked last night. From the lumber camp to Lost Pond was over six miles almost due north, and the Gallagher cabin stood half way, the only clearing in the deep woods. Gallagher had found it some years before, an abandoned lumber camp, and had moved into it with his wife and child. He was fond of cards and drinking and gradually the place had become a center for weekly parties of the kind Black Tom had attended the day before. Men came there, walking many miles, bringing bottles with them. It had gradually acquired a somewhat sinister reputation, especially among the women and children. Everybody thought it hard on Mrs. Gallagher and her Mary, seven years old, to have to live there surrounded by the deep, silent pine woods and to know only the life and laughter of Gallagher's half drunken visitors.

Black Tom knew of another trail which ran east from the lumber camp. After a couple of miles it turned, and skirting the base of the mountain wandered along dim and forgotten till it came to Lost Pond. There were but few men who could follow such a trail, ancient and overgrown as it was. Black Tom, who since boyhood had wandered more miles of forest and mountain than any ten other men he knew, had no trouble in keeping to it. However, after following it for two miles, when it began to curve around towards the north he left it at a point where it crossed a little brook and walked for half a mile through the water. He had never seen the brook so far below the usual spring level, but there was enough depth to cover his tracks.

At last he came to a great flat rock. He climbed out on that. From it he leaped to another flat stone on the easterly side of the brook, which at this point was running in a north to south direction. From the stone he stepped to a fallen oak of huge girth. Along the bole he walked until he came to an almost perpendicular ledge over which the oak had crashed on a night of storm and thunder a few years before. Down the face of the ledge hung a number of stout vines. Grasping one of these, Black Tom pulled himself up hand over hand for twenty feet. He crawled over an edge and found himself on a shelf thirty yards deep, shaded with great oaks and extending back to another vertical cliff, this one over a hundred feet high. A few rods to the south the shelf was cleft by a deep and narrow ravine, along the bottom of which murmured a small tributary of the brook he had just left. Half a dozen rods to the north the place was cut off by a small deep forest pool fed by subterranean springs. Access from the pool to his ledge was barred by a rock wall over fifty feet high.

Black Tom unslung his rifle and leaned it again a tree. He laid down the pack, and taking only his axe went out to reconnoiter the hiding place. He surveyed it carefully from north to south and from east to west, pausing only now and then to mark a likely sapling or a bit of timber for camp uses. He returned, satisfied that he was alone.

He now began to build his shelter and fireplace. First he cut some stakes of red oak four feet long and drove them into the earth three feet apart. Then he chopped six logs of the oak each four feet long. These he laid one on the other against the upright stakes, so as to make a sort of log wall. It was indeed a log wall, but its object was to act as a reflector, to turn the heat of the campfire on him as he slept. He cut two billets of hornbeam, two feet long, and laid them perpendicular to the log wall and two feet apart. These were his fire dogs. Four feet away from these back logs he built another wall seven feet long and three feet high, held upright by stakes driven in behind it.

Having finished this he went to a growth of young pines towards the south and cut a number of poles about ten feet long. He laid the row of poles over the second log wall so that the heavy ends rested on the ground, while the light ends projected three or four feet towards the fireplace. When all the poles were in place, he had under their projecting edge a shelter for his bed, with a windbreak of logs to keep the breeze off him while he slept. He cut slabs off a fallen white birch and shingled the shelter. He looked on the work with satisfaction.

Now he went away for half an hour. When he returned he was dragging a load of balsam boughs, which he trimmed down and laid under the shelter for a browse bed. He mixed with the browse, however, quantities of dry cedar bark, light twigs, and birch shavings, so that in case of a downpour he would have plenty of dry kindling. When the bed was finished he worked for two hours piling wood under the cavelike shelter of the east ledge, and building his own pile of firewood near the camp for night use.

When the sun was in mid-heaven he stopped. He had been eager and excited about the camp. Often he paused and changed his plans, working out some detail in greater perfection. Often and often, however, as he thought of the dead man the happy stream of his life stopped, like a brook into which has slid some great obstruction. But life in Tom Grogan was rich, vital, indomitable. He would stand for a while motionless, his face sorrowful, downcast, then the life force in him would flow around the unwelcome memory of that deed and he would go on eagerly working. Indeed, if the life force had a voice it might be thought to say: "I am sorry. I am repentant of the evil deed that was done through me in a mood of madness—but I must live." And always there was a part in Black Tom that loved life, loved the shaping of wood and fire to his need, loved the sunny April day, there was a something above that linked with the man of flesh, something innocent and eternal.

He built himself a little smokeless fire and cooked some dinner. He had brought along sweet potatoes and steak. While these were cooking he fashioned a bucket of birch bark, and going to the ravine let it down by a string and drew it up half full of water. He made tea in a large tin cup which he carried at his belt, and after drinking it reclined for an hour on his browse bed, smoking. With the naïve directness of the simple people among whom he lived he found justification for what he had done since the killing. He felt no stain of murder in his soul. It was an accident, he argued. He might indeed go to court and get into the hands of the lawyers and there would be talk and talk and talk. They might put him behind the bars. Surely that couldn't help Gallagher, who was dead, nor himself, who would thereby be rendered incapable of making it up to Mrs. Gallagher and the child.

Always, he thought from the beginning,

THE TEENIE WEENIES.

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

THE LITTLE FOLKS SET OFF ON A TRADING EXPEDITION. BY WM. DONAHEY.

FROGS had been scarce during the summer. The Teenie Weenie Cowboy and the Indian had bagged only six, and the little fellows spent most every day hunting. They were all small frogs, too, and it began to look as though the little people would have to go through most of the winter without frog ham, for twelve small hams wouldn't last long under the rose bush.

"I don't know what's the matter!" cried the Cowboy one evening as he sat on the front porch of the shoe house discussing hunting with several of the Teenie Weenies. "The frogs just ain't, that's all I can make out of it."

"I'll bet you could get plenty of frogs over around that big swamp, where the wild men live," suggested the Old Soldier.

"Well, if there are frogs any place you'll find them over there," answered the Cowboy. "But it is so far away and so hard to reach."

"Men," said the General, who had been listening to the talk, "we have got to have food for the winter, and I believe we could do no better than to go to the wild men's country for it. They always cure plenty of hams and store up a great quantity of wild rice, and we could get enough from them to last us through the winter. We would take over some things which they want, such as pins and maybe a few yards of silk goods and some pans in trade for the food."

"They are crazy for thimbles, too," cried the Dunce. "Don't you remember how they tried to get one of the Cook's cooking thimbles after the war was over?"

"Wouldn't it be dangerous to go into the wild men's country?" asked the Turk.

"Well, we'd have to take along our guns and keep a close watch out," answered the General. "The wild men have no guns and about four or five of us could take care of any trouble that might come up."

"You couldn't drive the trucks all the way on account of the swamp," said the Turk.

"Well, we'd go just as far as we could with the trucks and then build a raft and paddle the rest of the way to the island," answered the General.

The Teenie Weenies discussed the matter for several days, and finally it was decided to go into the wild men's country on a trading expedition.

The swamp where the wild men lived lay many miles away and it would take several days to make the journey. Of course all the little men wanted to go, but only a few could be taken along, and they had to be chosen with great care. The Lady of Fashion and Sally Guff begged so hard to go the General finally consented, as the little women promised to help cook and wait on table.

Gogo was to go as cook, the Turk and Paddy Pinn were to drive the trucks, the Indian and the Cowboy were to be used as guides, and Zip, the Teenie Weenie wild man, was to go along as interpreter. All of the little men were good marksmen, and each took along one of the army rifles and plenty of ammunition.

A great quantity of things was taken along to be traded to the wild men for the rice and ham, and several articles were taken as presents for Queen Moosie, queen of the wild men. The Old Soldier made out a list of the things which were to be used in trade, and here it is in the old fellow's own handwriting, just as he handed it to the General:

Goods to be used in trade with the wild men.

Forty nose pins.
Two Thimbles
8 - Jeff Tin buckets

One half of silk which Tic.

One roll off cake boy
Eight Thimbles full of salt.

120, T. sq. feet, of sheeting.
28 rubber bands.
9 marbles
8, T. sq. square feet, of isinglass.
12, " " " " tin foil
3 glass marbles

Early one morning the tiny trucks chugged out from under the rose bush, where the Teenie Weenie village stood, and set off towards the great swamp of the wild men. The General led the little caravan in his roadster, with the Indian seated at his side to point out the way.

The little people traveled all day except when they stopped at noon for their lunch. Early in the evening the General ordered the travelers to stop for the night, and the tiny trucks were run under a bush, where camp was made for the night. The girls were to sleep in one of the trucks, while the men put up a tent for their sleeping quarters. Gogo made a thimbleful of delicious soup, while the Indian and the Cowboy brought in a big blackberry, and with several slices of frog ham and plenty of bread the little people enjoyed a hearty meal.

After dinner Sally and the Lady of Fashion washed up the silverware, the cooking dishes, and the cherry-seed soup bowls, while the men made the camp ready for the night. The little folks were mighty tired that night, and you can well believe they tumbled into their tiny beds very early, for they had traveled many miles during the day.

THE PURPLE LADY

by Georgia Wood Pangborn

Blue Ribbon Fiction

Her wide purple skirts made a billowy circle.

Two Little Children and Some Paper Dolls; Two Big Children, the Rack of Dire Need—and a Mother Who Wouldn't Give Up

IT was a rainy afternoon, so Joe and Althea were in the attic, cutting fashion ladies out of an old Godey's Lady's Book. That is, Althea cut out the ladies. Joe designed animals on yellow wrapping paper. These, he said, would eat the ladies up. But when the back of Althea's wrist went to her mouth and her eyes, fixed mournfully on him, filled and filled, he said hastily that it was only a few of the animals who were like that. The rest were good and would protect the ladies. Just let him have his turn at the scissors and she would see. And so, indeed, it proved, for the beasts fought so terribly among themselves that in a short time good and bad alike were nothing but a heap of torn scraps, while the ladies, quite unscathed, still stood along the floor crack. Then Joe said he smelled the cookies being taken out of the oven and went down to see.

Althea was hungry. People at home were sick. People at home, though this she did not know, were nearly at their wits' end. So the kitchen at home was at sixes and sevens, and the little cooking done there was almost inedible in result. Mrs. Mack knew all about it and was terribly sorry, and helped by having Althea over at her house so much that she had begun to feel as if she had a little daughter of her own, as well as that square, blundering noisy little son. And as she watched the two together, how splendidly they got on, her dreams would sweep foolishly forward to a time when Joe should no longer be so square and blundering, nor Althea so tiny and frail. What a pair they would make if they carried out the fine promise of their babyhood!

Perhaps it was being hungry that made Althea's dream feeling so strong that day, for she had come away with even less luncheon than usual, and that after almost no breakfast at all. Now, at the smell of the cookies, she felt quite giddy and strange, as if the walls were mist, so that she had but to thrust out her hand and put it quite through them. This sensation was nothing new. The first time she felt it it had frightened her; then it had become rather interesting, for you always felt that almost anything queer might happen. Now if, for example, she could dream these paper ladies real! There was one of them in a purple gown who had such a sweet smile! Why couldn't she dream this lady round instead of flat, and set her to stepping softly about the floor instead of just pointing one tiny triangle of a slipper toe from her petticoats?

How sweet—how mysteriously sweet—those cookies smelled! Or was it the cookies? For it seemed more like clove pinks, when you put your nose right on the petals and draw them up against your nostrils.

She had never known the dream to be quite so dreamy before.

The far corners of the attic were a little dimmer than she liked; in particular, the corner where the model of the machine stood, all legs and elbows and long fingers. It had been there ever since she made the acquaintance of Joe's attic (which was the same as always), and though Joe had explained all about it—how it wouldn't go and couldn't hurt anybody—she had never quite liked it. It stood in front of a little black trunk which she had eyed longingly through the machine's sprawling levers. But Joe said the trunk things weren't old fashioned things you could dress up in, but the machine's things, drawing and models. He had seen them once, and some day, when he was a man, he was to have them and the machine and see if he could find out what it needed to make it go. It was something about printing; he knew that much, and he told Althea what printing was. He was a wise little boy.

But, of course, now that things turned to dream, the machine was as unsubstantial as the rest, so as she looked at it through half-closed eyes Althea was not surprised that it should thin, dissolve, become invisible. O, how lovely! She had done it! She had dreamed the lady real!

Yes, there she was, a real dream lady, lady size, too, not just a doll, and she wore a great braid of yellow hair around the top of her head like a crown.

She was sitting on the floor in front of the trunk, and her wide purple skirts made a billowy circle about her until she was like some great inverted flower. The trunk was open, and it was not just full of drawings and things. She was taking out the loveliest little dresses, just right for a doll, and holding them up and looking at them, then folding them up and putting them away again, the way you do to see if these are moths. Clove pinks! Well, I should think so! There they were at her throat, just where the lacy ruffle made a V, finished at its point with a tiny black velvet bow. As a paper lady she had not been wearing clove pinks. In a number of ways she was not quite like the paper lady—only the way of wearing her hair, and the gown with its lovely wide skirts. The material had a white ground and was all sprigged with tiny flowers and true lovers' knots.

And then, while she held up a tiny white dress between her face and Althea, Althea saw that her eyes were looking at her above the little garment's dress. Her mouth was hidden, but Althea knew it smiled.

But just as Althea was about to speak Joe had to come storming up, and then there was no lady except the paper one still in her hand, and the sprawling machine, as before, stood in front of the trunk.

There were not only cookies and milk, but a plate of sandwiches. It was on account of the sandwiches, Joe explained, that he had been so long. His mother had insisted on his waiting while she put them up, and they must be eaten first, she said.

Althea took her sandwich over to the machine and looked through its bars at the trunk. It was solid enough now. Then she looked sharply at the paper lady, but she was flat and doll-ish. Like—yes, only in the way the hair was done and the big skirt like a flower. The face was quite different. She put an inquiring greasy finger on the paper belted on his sword and wore a revolver openly, the clamor subsided somewhat.

He fell back, resolving to sell his life dearly

"You're all right here," said the sailor hastily. "My men will look after you. Forbes, I'll have to go—there's no holding back. Until I'm certain——"

"You mustn't leave us," protested the fiercy faced one. "I protest, sir! We shall all be killed like sheep."

"There are thirty men to be done away with before you're reached," said Maidstone, shaking himself free. "Don't worry me."

"It's quite right," said Forbes, rising weakly. "Mr. Maidstone is needed elsewhere; the last batch said the mob was heading towards—you know where! Look alive!"

He wrung his chum's hand, and Maidstone hitched his sword tighter; his face was white and set, his eyes blazed like live coals. It would fare ill with any one who attempted to stop him now. In the patio he hesitated, looking at his self-reliant bluejackets calculatingly. But his first duty was towards his fellow countrymen; not one might be spared. Whatever was done must be done alone. He heard the gates clang behind him; he found himself in the open street, far away, but ever growing nearer, sounded the voices of the mob.

A screaming figure appeared at a window; a man appeared behind and snatched grimly outwards. There was nothing to be done; the door broke abroad and disgorged yelling fiends; before Maidstone was clear of the street flames were soaring upwards in his wake. His breath came fast; if they had already reached the house he was aiming for!

A small knot of marauders surged to meet him, a knife flashed, harsh voices challenged. But his long sword was out and the knife spun into the air, the wielder fell away clasping at his slashed wrist; the pommel of the weapon took another under the chin and sent him flying, and he was through, still speeding on. Down the wide street poured men, hundreds of them, yelling like demons; some of them waved torches, which they flung in at broken windows.

It became a race between Maidstone and the mob. Midway between them lay the entrance of the street that held his all; he flew like an escaping tiger; the mob flew like wolves. He spun down the narrow entry—the street was free for the moment; the house he sought was in darkness. A silent prayer of thankfulness rose to his lips; it died away as a piercing scream bit the air. It was the voice of Dolores, or he might never trust his senses again. The house was approachable from another street. Could it be that the mob had already entered? The stout door resisted his weight; he threw himself against it again and again, but it still stood. No time for foolery now; the revolver muzzle was thrust into the lock and the weapon squibbed twice. Then he flung himself upon it again; it creaked and went down.

There was a trampling overhead, a renewal of the screaming; he went up the stairs three at a time and paused for one moment in the doorway of the room where he had first met Dolores. The woman he loved, her hair unbound, her face as white as death, was struggling in the arms of a brutal faced fellow. A single lamp blazed in the apartment; its light was sufficient to show the sailor all he needed to see. He wasted no words, but, darting forward, smashed the hilt of his sword into the man's face. The man relaxed his grip and came at Maidstone with an eighteen inch knife. He ducked, and the sword point passed harmlessly over his head; a stool whirred against the sailor's legs, almost unbalancing him. Mad with what he had seen, he hurled himself upon the man, felt the knife point take his arm and gave the man the edge of the blade across the elbow. He yelled and dropped his knife, glared savagely at the Englishman, seemed about to fling himself on him again, but, changing his mind, he ran through to another room and yelled loudly. From below sounded the crashing of timber and the tread of many feet.

"Looks as if the whole nest was loose," cogitated Maidstone, looking about for a defensive position.

A sofa was lying overturned close to the wall; he snatched up the girl and placed her behind it; then he waited for what was coming. A crowd showed at the doorway, stones were thrown; he was bleeding fast; but his revolver barked once and a man went down. Again, but the shot went wide; again—this time he did not miss. The man he had first attacked issued from the inner apartment and yelled to the mob to end the matter once and for all, and Maidstone remembered that he had brought no pouch of cartridges with him, thinking that a show of arms would be sufficient.

He saved his shots now, holding himself in readiness. He dared not contemplate the end. Something surged into awful life within him; he leaped the sofa and was amongst them like a firebrand, slashing, thrusting, tainted with their own madness for the time being. They recoiled, but the press behind was too great; they had to come on again. He fell back, battling hard, resolved to sell his life very dearly, but—— What was this? They were thinning away, vanishing; his senses were reeling, but surely that face at the door was not a Spaniard's.

"We took the liberty, sir," said a sailor respectfully, "seein' as how nothin' was doin' down there, for to foller ye, sir. Wery hot time below, sir, but them rats is runnin', sir, handsome."

"Why, Potts!" He could hardly stand now, and he realised that he was wounded in several places. "Look after the lady there."

"Yes, sir; and wot's to be done with this cove here, sir, wot we found tryin' to set fire to the shop?" He thrust forward the man who had been molesting Dolores.

"Bring him along to the consulate, Potts; we'll keep him as a curiosity. His face seems familiar to me; perhaps I'll remember who-he is later. Ah!"

"Reckon we'll need for to carry 'em both," said Potts, receiving his senseless officer on his capacious breast.

IV.

"YES, señor, I grant you that you saved my daughter—if she was in any danger; but——"

It was a week afterwards, and quiet had been restored. The Royalist troops had come into the town from Saragossa and the rising had fizzled out like an exhausted candle. Maidstone was fast recovering from his hurts; Dolores had been reinstated in her own home.

"Well, I'm not counting on your gratitude, but I want to marry her, all the same, Señor de Bazan."

"I refuse, of course, señor. My daughter must marry a Spaniard, not an English heretic. Besides, she is an obedient daughter and she will allow herself to be governed by my dictates."

"Ah! she's already said otherwise. We settled it in the consulate the other night. She thought I was dying and that made her say what was in her heart. She loves me, bless her, as I love her!"

"It is still impossible, señor."

"And what if we refuse to consider you at all, señor?" Maidstone asked coolly.

"A father has some authority in this country. I will have her taken to a convent——"

"Ah! you use threats? Look here, Don Antonio, if we're fighting with bared weapons I'll deliver my thrust, too. The man who was trying to carry off your daughter was Pedro Carrangones, and he's known as one of the most red hot Carlists in this province. Dolores tells me that he wanted to marry her a year ago and that you said he'd have to wait."

"Señor, because a scoundrel——"

"Hold on. I said he was a Carlist. Well, what's to stop me from telling the commander of the troops here that the alcalde is secretly in league with the reddest, hottest Carlist there is? Eh? What would they say to that, those who've already got their suspicions?"

"It is a lie, señor!" But the alcalde licked lips with a drier tongue.

"It is the truth. Come. Don Antonio, reconsider your verdict."

Maidstone's resolute eyes were upon the Spaniard and the latter wavered beneath their glance.

"You will find Dolores in the upper room, señor," said Don Antonio at last.

lady's countenance and that person's last claim to beauty vanished.

ALTHEA sat in the largest, most comfortable chair in what had been Mrs. Mack's room, but was now hers. Although there was furnace heat throughout the house, in this room a bit of wood fire also helped to thrust back the January cold. For it was the January of 1918, and a winter storm was raging against the windows.

Mrs. Mack was sitting on an ottoman at Althea's feet—a dowager who had quite resigned her crown, but who remained—O, yes, remained a power behind the throne of the new queen. Now, in the old queen's face, so long as it was unobserved, was the light of battle: perhaps of desperation. Only when the young woman's eyes were upon her—then it was calm, confident, reassuring.

"How warm and safe I am—here," said Althea. "When I think of those mothers and babies I feel wicked."

"I know," said Mrs. Mack. "But we are not wicked. We are reserves. Our part is to keep ourselves steady."

"Yes," said Althea, "only when the wind is like that I seem to hear them."

And, indeed, the wind had found a crevice which it could make whimper and wail like a tiny child in trouble.

"But it is the wind," said Althea. "Just only the wind."

She turned from the frosted window to Joe's mother.

"How was he when you looked in last?"

"Sleeping, I think. At least he was quiet."

"Well," said Althea confidently, "I can be patient. It isn't as if I couldn't understand why he can't bear the sight of me. 'The world is no place for women,' he said. That tells it all. He never could bear even small cruelties, and he has been seeing things that it almost kills us to read about. We know how he has fought—his medals would tell us, even if we didn't know anyway."

"Yes," said his mother, and her voice was calm. She even bent down and adjusted the logs more precisely. "It is a wound of the spirit, but as honorable a one as the other—or the gas. I have sometimes thought that in this war more than in other wars, the enemy has had power to reach a man's soul. I may be mistaken; yet, even if it is so, such a wound must heal. I do not believe any such wound, even of the soul, can touch the real center. Come, now, we mustn't get too serious. That is a concession to the enemy."

"So you have the little things all airing? How sweet and confident they look with the little sleeves spread out! Wait till the arms get in them and begin to flap and wave! Joe were out everything! I never saw such a baby. He scrubbed through his long dresses just as he did later through his knickerbockers. It's a shame that he didn't leave anything of his wardrobe for his own baby—but they never think of that! He shoved his sleeves and kicked the long skirts to shreds. So I couldn't save anything."

"I do wish," said Althea, "I could have embroidered some slips. Of course, the woolen things are most important this weather, but I wanted a frilly cap, too. Poor baby! He won't be going out much in this weather, but I'd like to see him in one. There's nothing quite like a baby's face with a frill around it and a bow under the chin."

"Well," said Mrs. Mack, doubtfully; "it's terrible the way they get ribbon ends in their mouths. Bad for them and hard on ribbons. You tie them under one ear, not under the chin. But even so, they always get them and chew them."

"By the bye—" said Althea, suddenly, then stopped with a shy, sidelong look.

"Yes, my dear?"

"I wish—that little trunk in the attic, the one behind your father's model. Are you sure there's nothing in it but drawings and things like that?"

"You are thinking of your old attic ghost? O, my dear; don't get the notion that it was anything more than a phantom of your poor little hungry tummy. The first thing the fakirs and those people do when they want to see visions is to fast. You'd been wanting to get into that trunk, of course. Children always want to get into shut things, and you certainly had been fasting. Besides, you were sick not long afterwards, too. I dare say you had a temperature at the time."

"And yet," said Althea, touching the little display rather discontentedly, avariciously, "did you ever look into it—clear down to the bottom?"

"Why, no; not to the bottom, but enough so that I could see. It's only drawings. After my mother's death my father just put everything away, stuffed his drawings into the trunk, dragged the poor old model in front of it, and forgot it, as well as he could. He had had great hopes of it, but it would have taken money to finish it, and when she went and he had me to keep, he just took a bookkeeper's position at the Tracy lumber yard and finished out his days there."

"I should think mothers would—come back, if anybody ever does," paused Althea. "I would."

"Would you, my dear?" Mrs. Mack thought it over. "Yes," she agreed, "it's hard to imagine anything keeping one away. I don't see how death could be strong enough," she said, thinking of Joe in the other room, Althea in this, and the other now so near—and all of them with only herself to help them in their need. Mrs. Mack felt that she at least must be a stronger force than death. And if she, why, then other mothers. Death could never quench that terrible anxiety to help. "Many waters cannot quench love."

"I thought then," said Althea, "it was old doll things she was looking over. But now—I know," and she pointed at her own collection, "it wasn't doll things. If—if I could," she said. "I mean, if it were wise—I suppose it wouldn't be—I'd ask you to let me go up and look."

"Why, you dear, persistent little Fatima! I'll look; of course I will, though I'm afraid you'll be disappointed. It wouldn't do for you to go up those stairs and pull heavy attic things around, of course. How funny it would be if there should be anything under the poor old drawings. There's just one thing that makes me think you may be right, and that's my not being able to find any of my own old things before Joe came. I hunted everywhere. I did want them. I felt just as you do now. I wanted oceans of lovely things for my baby, and in my case I really had plenty, but I was greedy for more, and there wasn't a sock or a cap or a nightie of what I had worn. I concluded she must have sent them to the Chicago fire sufferers. You know a tide of old clothes set toward Chicago in '71, just as our things all went to Belgium. That was the year of her death. I concluded it was that, and let it go.

"I was only a year old when she died," said Mrs. Mack, looking wistfully at an ill done crayon portrait. "I have no memory of her at all."

She paused, and then repeated the tragic little story. Althea had heard it, and she knew that Althea had heard it, yet she repeated it, as one does repeat some well known tale or a song.

"She had gone out to pick green grapes for jelly. You know in those days there was a tongue of the real woods that came down then between our garden and the village. Hunters sometimes followed their game there, honestly supposing there were no houses near. On that morning my father heard shots and went out, as he sometimes did, to warn them. He found four lads who had just got a fox and were so proud of their splendid pelt! He knew the boys, and they were especial pets of my mother's, too, and he brought them all up to the garden to find her and show her their prize. And—there she lay, with the grapes scattered about her . . . brought down like a partridge!

"Poor boys! After these years, I ache more for them even than for my father and mother! Of course, they knew it was one of their bullets that had killed her, though there was no way of telling who had fired the shot—not that it really mattered. But the boyhood of them all died then and there along with her. They only stayed long enough to be her pallbearers and be exonerated by everybody. Then they left town. One of them died in the Indian fighting, and another in the Spanish war. The others—I don't know. They just dropped out."

"I believe she came back," said Althea. "She would!"

"If she could," agreed Mrs. Mack, "and now, I must see to the furnace."

"You're going in to Joe first?"

"Yes."

"If he's sleeping, couldn't I—just look?"

"I don't believe I would—his sleep is so light, you know."

"O, well—it won't be long now. The baby will cure him. If I didn't believe so

Mrs. Mack sped down the stairs like a swooping bird.

—but he will! Now do go and sit with him. Let him find your hand when he wakes. The sound of snow flicking against the window is so desolate. I'm afraid it will make him think—of those things. When you are there it is almost as if I were allowed to go in. I'll go on with this botee and—then you'll look in the little trunk, if you aren't too tired? I suppose it was only a dream, but I shan't be quite satisfied until I'm sure."

So Joe's mother went softly into Joe's room. Not the room which she had given him and his little wife during their wild snatch of a honeymoon before Joe went away through black seas to that business of putting out a world fire, but the room of his boyhood, with its dado of lacrosse sticks, snowshoes, tennis rackets, newspaper cartoons, thumb-tacked to the wall. The antlers of his first buck were over the center of the mantelpiece, and underneath it the picture of Althea, his first and only love. Because of the chill of the night she had put over him his bearskin—a trophy of his father's.

So Joe lay on the bed where he had lain as a little boy, and the glimmer of his half open eyes showed he was awake. And while she stood there looking down at him, to all appearance serene at heart, strong, comforting, unbowed by any trouble, it seemed to her that her real self was upon its knees hysterically wailing and calling upon a deaf God, gathering her wasted son in her arms, cursing the powers of destruction that had struck him down.

The half open eyes met hers.

"The world is no place for women," he whispered from his pillow. "You should have told me."

She sat beside him, taking the left hand that lay outside, so white and gaunt and large upon the black bear skin. The other one was still helpless. But recovering—O, yes! Some day, if this wound of the soul permitted, he would walk about and have two arms and hands. Had it been a mistake, bringing him home? Should she have left him at the hospital? It had been so costly—so difficult, getting him back into her own care, but she had been so sure that Althea and her great hope would rouse and cure him. And he had given just one understanding, terrified look and shuddered away.

"Don't let her come in here," said Joe. "But tell her—you tell her—that—that I didn't know. I thought it was right to love."

"It's the most right thing in the world, little son. You did no wrong."

But he had only moaned and hid his face, saying again: "This world is no place for women."

It was hard not to plead and argue against this terrible conviction of his. At first she had tried, but it only brought on that terrible shuddering silence—worse even than the outbreaks of cursing. So, as the doctor advised, they were all agreed now, to wait for that person who was on the way, whose journey was nearly done—who might come at almost any minute now, for though, as the doctor had promised, time would cure all by itself, the one who was coming might take the matter out of the hands of time. He had seen such miracles worked before by such tiny persons.

Joe shut his eyes and turned his head away. She would have stayed, but she was alert about her other vanities this stormy night. Besides, there was the furnace to see to, and the question of food, and she was only one mother to do everything—everything.

AS Mrs. Mack stood for a moment in the doorway, smiling back at Althea, the girl thought once again how safe and cared for she was, here with Joe's mother, and she wondered at the older woman's fortitude, hoping humbly that when she should be fifty and had troubles she could stand as straight and calm under them. And yet—how little gray there had been in her hair when Joe went away, while now—it was white. Not the white that is said to come with spectacular suddenness, overnight, but a swift, steady, unrelenting storm through the months, the result seeming complete tonight, and matching the white of the frosted pane and the drifts beyond it.

For an instant, as realization of this change came to Althea, she caught at her tears, and had a battle with them before she could smile back calmly, and take up her knitting with a placid face.

But perhaps if she could have seen that other face as it turned away her stitches with the flowers of evergreens. She did not change color, but her eyes traveled slowly over his handsome face, and once or twice she smiled quietly. Then she turned pale, and bitterly pressed one hand on the lace of her bosom.

"What is it?" inquired Maidstone.

"Nothing—the heat of the room, señor." She rose and fastened to the lattice, which he threw wide open, despite the girl's protests, and when he returned he noticed that both her mistress and her aunt—the second duenna occupied that relationship—were casting furtive glances towards the door.

"Look as if they were expecting an earthquake," was his impression. "She seems a bit perturbed, too." A wild hope of rescuing her from some dilemma came to him then.

Forbes had risen and was trying to catch his companion's eye, but Maidstone looked only at the girl's pallid countenance. What on earth had come to cause that swift change from glowing ripeness to alarming fear? He had not to wait long for a solution. The doorway darkened and outlined a short, pompous figure of a man; the lieutenant started.

"Dolores, Dolores," he whispered. "I love you—I love you! I want see you—talk to you!"

She was red and white by turns; her duenna was mild, like that of a frightened deer.

"Señor Maidstone, it is hopeless! Hist! My aunt is returning. You will only cause yourself pain by——"

"Dolores, what does my pain matter to you? I love you! Quick—do you love me?"

The next of the worshipers had gone; only a burly vaquero remained, who was arduously up the central gangway. Maidstone remembered his nation bore for courage and drew Dolores towards him. His senses reeled as her lips rested on his for a second; then she was gone, carrying the sunlight with her. He swore a pious oath aloud.

"I'll win her yet," he said.

"I'll be gone—sooner than I thought. Hark!"

The two men sprang to their feet in the

"They'll be completely out of hand in a little while," surmised the casual caller. Voices, lifted in shrill tones, seemed laboring over the words. "If that's so there'll be needed done on the nods.

"If that's so there'll be needed done tonight," said the consul. "Back we go, Maidstone, and I think a few men would be an advantage."

"Right." They forced their way to the side and turned to retrace their steps, but the crowd was already filling their line of progress. They were hurled roughly more than once. It was no time for nicety of conduct; Forbes struck a man with the fair side of his cane and the fellow reeled against a post, unconscious; a man with the stick of a fruit-seller was overturned, his contents scattered in the dust. Maidstone, his breath utterly gone, stuck to his companion like a leech. Once they were forced to a standstill by a surging mass of humanity, and Maidstone, with a sudden cry of warning, rose on the air; above all other sounds came the unmistakable clatter of shod hoofs. But the din died away and further shots were heard. They found it well nigh impossible to retreat. "No, you won't." The consul linked his arm in that of the sailor. "You're going to stop on here until you're officially relieved. After all, one girl doesn't make a world."

"She makes mine. Jove! did you ever see anything like her? How could such a father have such a daughter?"

"It does seem a bit strange. And, between ourselves, her father is more than a fiery tempered old fool. I am inclined to think that he's something of a Carlist at heart, despite his assurances to the contrary. I've had my suspicions for some time."

Maidstone haunted the street religiously from that day, despite the growing unrest in the town, which was evinced in a hundred ways. Knots of men would break up at his approach and drift away aimlessly, only to reappear when he had passed. For three days the balcony was deserted; on the fourth a rose was tossed out of the window and fell at his feet. He picked it up and wondered foolishly what had had thrown it.

On the fifth day he saw her, and his heart thudded loudly as he watched the lowered eyelids and the delicately flushed cheek.

He stood there fighting with speechlessness, looking upwards as if he would have devoured her, and, drawn forward by the love of him, she stooped her queenly head.

"There is a service in the Church of San Martino tomorrow at ten," she said, softly, and disappeared, but a white rose that she had held between her fingers fluttered down-

He was at the church at eight, wondering if the time would ever pass, but though casual worshipers passed him where he stood, half concealed by the lattice curtains, ordered themselves, and sank to their knees on the cool stone floor, the vision he sought did not appear. The clock struck ten, and the altar boys were rewarded by so much as a single glimpse of the woman he loved.

"Only a demonstration," suggested Maidstone.

"But a demonstration might become a revolution in an hour in this country—God knows it!" he questioned. "Of all the devilish fates that ever dogged a man, could anything have been more deserteming? "But a demonstration might become a revolution in an hour in this country—that was a shot."

It was, without a doubt, a single, startling shot.

"What it spread as far as last?" asked the consul.

"There's no knowing; and there are English people galore in the town. We'd better go out and see what damage is being done."

They donned light coats over their evening clothes and passed into the plaza; a surging crowd received them and bundled them along. Far away cheering died somewhat; a low, hoarse growl rose wildly.

"They've tasted blood—Two Ararat that came before," said the latter, grasping his cane firmly. "But the troops should be able to keep them in order."

"They're three-quarters Carlist here—there's no telling. We'll go as far as we can, and then back to the consulate. You'll have to get your men up if the trouble spreads this way, Maidstone."

"That's all right. Hallo! Ara L Legion."

The electric lights that ended in the square suddenly went out; there was a square from the gathering mob that flocked to the latter end. Windows crashed, glass fell outwards and tinkled on the pavement, a stone dropped at Maidstone's feet. They were thrust this way and that; by dint of squaring his great shoulders and employing his cheque freely the major steamed the current as an ironclad steams

"Let me introduce my friend, Señor Maidstone, who commands the warship at present in the harbor," interposed the consul, coming Maidstone under his breath.

He was cyst, stared intently, and then drew back the hand which was half extended.

"Pardon me, but we have met before," he said softly. "If I recollect aright, you are the gentleman who accidentally threw me into the mud yesterday and laughed at my discomfiture."

"I assure you, Señor de Baum, no one could have been more concerned than I at your unfortunate accident. But as to your saying that I deliberately thrust you into the mud, that is a mistake. The whole affair was an accident, and for my unintentional part in it I apologize." .

The don's face grew red and swollen, his breath came with difficulty. He waved his hand to warn back his daughter, who, her eyes big with concern, now approached him.

"I think we'd better be going," said Forbes hurriedly. "We await another time."

"Precisely what I was thinking myself, Señor. I have tendered my apology, and I hope it will be accepted. More than that I cannot say, and anyhow, I offered my handkerchief to clean you. The handkerchief was found now at that, so I don't see what there is to cavil at."

"It is the arrogant insolence of your whole nation that I have to cavil at, señor," roared the don. "I cannot go anywhere but I see your countrymen; I am hooted in my own officials apartments by Englishmen; I am cursed at by Englishmen; I am thrust into the mud by Englishmen——" He choked and further speech was out of the question.

Maidstone reached for his hat and bowed to the elder ladies. Then he walked composedly across to Dolores and lifted her hand to his lips. It was a marvelous piece of effrontery, but to his amazement the slight pressure he administered to the fingers was returned—or he imagined as much.

"Since our presence is unwelcome I think we had better retire," he said to Don Antonio, and without further words he walked past him and out of the house.

Before de Baum rose in a frightened way and laid her hand on her husband's arm.

"I will caution them—I am very sorry," she murmured. "But, Antonio, there are strangers present."

He glared around him and his eyes fell on Forbes.

"Ah, Señor Forbes," was his cold remark. "It is long since we had the—pleasure of seeing you beneath our roof. Let me see—not since that small matter of the insolent British seamen who insulted me——" would have set less smoothly. And perhaps if there had been any invisible watchers just then—if, for example, the Purple Lady of Althea's attic dream had been a little restless that night with whatever old anxiety called her back to wander through those rooms once so familiar and dear to her, and if in those wanderings she had come upon that face as, in turning away from Althea's door, it changed—she must have cried out and fled back to her own world.

Haggard, fierce, threatening, old—fifty? This woman was seventy or more. Her eyes were the eyes of a deer with the hounds slashing at its flanks, or of a woman in Belgium seeking escape and finding none; but not giving up, no, not giving up! Merely, just for the moment, unmasked of that show of courage which must be assumed if others are not to despair also. Not needing for a little while to pretend to be unafraid.

And yet, you know, she was merely going down to see about the furnace and to plan the morning's breakfast. That was really quite all she had in her mind at the moment; at least, all except her constant anxiety about the wounded mind and body of her son, and her knowledge of that which was waiting for Althea—waiting to torment and rend, perhaps to slay.

Her only light through all that dark part of the house was one candle, though in Althea's room a pink shaded lamp burned cheerfully. The house was wired for electricity, but there was none in use. She had given Althea to understand that this was not only because of the poor quality of service supplied by the town but because she really liked candles and old fashioned lamps better. Althea never had the slightest hint that the meter had been taken out because the bills had not been paid. And when, at intervals, she heard her mother-in-law handling saw and ax in the cellar, and knew by the smell that the furnace was being fed with wood instead of coal, it never occurred to her that they were enduring a sharper coal famine than other families in town; that carload after carload of coal had come in, but that they had had to let their allotment go because they had no money to pay for it. Nor did Althea know of the mortgage, and how the money from it had all been licked up by old debts so quickly that there had been barely enough to finance that terrible journey after Joe.

No—although Althea knew of plenty of trouble, she was carefully uninformed concerning the wolf which was not only at the door, but, as it seemed to Mrs. Mack on this night, fairly past it—as if it met her, intangibly fearful, in those dark rooms, and padded after her wherever she went, sniffing at her heels. But so far she had kept it from those two doors, and somehow—somehow—she would continue to keep it from them!

When she had fed the furnace with four foot lengths of stout oak planks, for the bins, like the rest of the old house, were solidly and honestly built, Mrs. Mack listened for a minute at the foot of the stairs to make certain that there was no sound of need from above, then lifted an inverted box and took from beneath it a hen which had been indignantly awaiting her fate since morning. She was the last—the last—of a flock of fifty, and a pet. Mrs. Mack gave a short sigh, but did not falter. What must be, must.

She had become skillful since first, for love's sake, she had learned how to slay a living thing. Probably no butcher was ever more merciful or quick, and no protesting squawk troubled other ears.

Then came the scalding and tedious picking, but since bringing herself to this sort of task she had arranged things efficiently in her little cellar abattoir. The hot water of the furnace was at hand, she was well covered by a huge apron, and the wet feathers were soon added to the others in the barrel, to be buried under the grape vine when spring came, while what was left was just chicken—no more depressing in its aspect than any fowl you might buy of a respectable butcher.

But it was the last—and now, what?

As she mounted the cellar stairs with the candle in one hand and the chicken dangling from the other she almost smiled at a swift grotesque vision of herself making use of her knowledge of her neighbor's hen roosts, roosts which had not been depleted. Yet—was it so impossible? Was there anything in the wide world that she would not do for those two upstairs if it was possible—and safe? She had always sworn she would never get into debt—but she was in debt; that she would never, under any circumstanaces, mortgage her house—yet how quickly she had done it when it was a question of getting Joe home!

How would being a chicken thief be worse than being so in debt to one's grocer that credit had at last been refused? And in her imagination that figure persisted, slinking, witchlike, stealing through the moonlight, calming the dogs that knew and loved her, and quietly, skillfully, obtaining food like any other wild mother—loping safely home with it.

As she entered the kitchen she had a moment's glimpse of her reflection in the black circle of the kitchen window, as yet uncovered by frost, and her heart leaped. It was so like the evil face of famine itself peering in!

Yes—if the Purple Lady had been invisibly present and had seen that face one can fancy she would have fled.

Or—being who she was—would she have only peered the closer, tried to gather that white head to her bosom, kissed it, soothed it, kept near, step by step, through all the sordid agony? Would she have been trying to help, going from Joe to Althea, from Althea to Joe, relieving the other of sentry duty while those necessary things were done in the cellar and kitchen—from Althea to Joe and then back again to touch the white hair yearningly?

Mrs. Mack hung her fowl upon a nail and went the rounds of the kitchen. There was a little rice, a bit of dried codfish, perhaps half a dozen jars of jelly. (She had sold off her great store of fruit and preserves long ago—at a loss—to more prosperous neighbors.) And there was a little fat left over from her last cellar sacrifice but one. How strange, how unbelievably strange, that there should be no more credit from the grocery where she had traded for thirty years! How cruel people could be to each other, she reflected, calling to mind the smug, fat face and near set, bleared eyes of her creditor. She could not remember that she had ever been cruel, or unjust, or ungenerous. But perhaps she had, unknowingly. Sometimes she had been rather grudging to beggars and peddlers who came and bothered at her back door; but only when their faces had betrayed them as slimy, shiftless, idle creatures who ought not to be encouraged. Well—perhaps that was the way her grocer and coal dealer and the man who held the mortgage judged of her.

At any rate, sufficient unto the day. Rice, chicken, jelly—that would see them through tomorrow. Perhaps she could bring herself to lay the case before Dr. Robeon if she must. He would not let Althea suffer—surely not! And, in time, the government would send Joe's pay—some day. And when Althea was all safe, why, then—then there were all sorts of work one could do.

And so she smoothed her face, straightened her shoulders, and went to look at the children again.

Joe was asleep; really asleep. After all, this was not so different from that time she had so nearly lost him with scarlet fever. He had been delirious then, and her heart had died within her. This was only the same agony on a larger scale—what else? She had had the same aching ganglion under the heart then, and had been younger—less able to bear it. . . . If one could only believe that his dreams were calm! But in the half light she could still see the knotted forehead, the clenched hand, so white against the black bearskin.

She stole out and went to look at Althea. But that wise child had gone to bed and was asleep also. Here, too, Mrs. Mack paused. So austerely lovely—so childlike still. Rough fate must surely turn aside from this!

She lifted her clenched hands and held them against her dry eyes for a moment as she turned away, then, seeing the gay, expectant garments still airing before the dying fire, she took up her candle once more and went up the garret stairs. She could do that much. Though, of course, there would be nothing. She had promised.

What an odd suggestion of flowers in the air! A breath of the sachet Althea had used for her pretties, no doubt, but for the moment Mrs. Mack would have said she smelt a clove pink.

THE garret's time darkened rafters gave back no light at all from her candle flame; only the remote square of the tiny window flung back a spark as dim as her own, one small flash of greeting as she passed. It was by that window Althea and Joe had played with their paper ladies and animals. Indeed, had she cared to search them out, Mrs. Mack could have found their faded fragments still in a box of toys that stood there. Even the Purple Lady, not much different in appearance from that other day, although gone a little spider webby and dusty, still pointed her one graceful toe, and showed a trace of her smile under the smudge left by Althea's greasy finger.

The machine was not perceptible until she brought her flame almost against its dark skeleton, but she knew it well—could, indeed, have almost gone about this business blindfold. She hoped, as she set her candle down and laid hold of a dusty lever, that the noise of its dragging would not reach her sleepers. But perhaps the rush of wind, the sharp rustle of the snow thrust against the windows, was loud enough to cover in whatever she had to do.

The trunk was locked, the key forgotten and lost long ago. She prized the old hasp open. Poor, patient old drawings! There they lay. So many years of a man's life—so much hope, so much skill—so much rubbish! She had no knowledge of mechanics to enable her to follow and understand the purport of those careful, careful lines, but the time, the labor, the hope, the ultimate failure—there was no misreading these.

She laid the drawings gently at one side. Under them were boxes. The first she lifted out was heavy. She knew what it must be, but lifted the cover to make sure. Yes, these were the disjointed parts of a small model of the machine. Exquisite bits of polished wood and carefully wrought metal, all arranged in order like a child's building blocks after a day of play. She put this box on top of the drawings and lifted the other a large one, fitting the bottom of the trunk like a tray. If—there were anything in Althea's vision this must be the right box. It came up with such a different feel from the other box, so light, yet full! Her hands trembled. She lifted the pasteboard cover and touched the yellowed tissue paper.

"Mother!" she whispered, "Mother!"

And then, just as she would have looked further at the contents, she heard herself called in a soft, guarded voice, and there was that in the call which turned her blood to ice. O God! On a night like this—now?

Still holding the box and the candle, she darted to the stairhead and saw—as she knew she should see—Althea's face looking up at her. Althea also held a candle, and she, too, was as white as the drifted snow. Her forehead glistened, her eyes were wide and black, but a smile fluttered upon her lips.

"Coming at once, my darling," Mrs. Mack sped down the stairs like a swooping bird. "Back to bed. Don't be troubled. It will be all right—all right—all right!

"Now I must telephone."

"How ever can the doctor get through!" gasped Althea. "Isn't it drifting terribly?"

"O," said the other serenely, "you don't know doctors. He won't try to use his sleigh. He'll just get on his little black cob. I've seen them going about in worse weather than this."

"The wires may be down."

"They won't be."

"I wasn't—worrying—I only meant—if they should be—don't worry. We can get along. Other women have." Then she shut her lips tight on a cry that almost came. But neither that wail nor any other passed her lips during that long night. For the sake of Joe, dreaming terrible things in the next room; for the sake of Joe who had heard, God knows what cries! and so could bear no more, she kept silence—silence!

THE wires were not down, but a colder thing than storm thrust her back when Mrs. Mack sent her call into the night.

"We can't take any more calls from you," came back sharp and fine—with a cruel edge of satisfaction in the underbred voice. "The service is suspended for nonpayment of the last three months' charges."

"Really!" said Mrs. Mack. "How careless of me. I'll see to that tomorrow. But I must ask you to take this call, because—" and she went on confidently to explain. But she found neither understanding nor pity in the only ear her voice could reach. Surely that could not be a laugh! Some sound of the storm, breaking in. No human creature could laugh. "Orders is orders," decreed the voice. And central answered her no more.

But there was no time for anger. The nearest neighbors—but the nearest house was closed for the winter; the house beyond that had no phone, nor any one able to help—just two feeble deaf old women there. And if she tried to go farther still—it might take hours in such weather.

Well, then, what must be, must!

She built up the kitchen fire and put on water to boil. Then she went to the closet, where all her complete preparations for the doctor were kept. No, nothing lacked. She passed in lightning review all her knowledge of these matters, and then, with her calmest face, her gentlest tone, rejoined Althea.

"The phone does seem to be out of order," she admitted lightly, "but we'll keep our heads and come through with flying colors. Here's our chance to show what good pioneer stuff we are!"

And so they took up their battle—in silence.

Sometimes—when she could speak at all—Althea would say:

"Go see if Joe is sleeping still. O, make sure he is all right!"

And he always was. At least, he was always sleeping. But his hand was clenched, and his face the face of a man who still fights—in his sleep.

And at last—at last—the snow ceased falling, and the wind was quiet and a faint pink stole into the east, and one came who did not know of any reason for silence, who believed earnestly that lungs and voice were intended to be used to their utmost. Again and again he filled his mighty lungs with air and expelled it by way of his powerful larynx. A fine baby! A splendid baby! Such a one as had never come into the world before. Even Joe had not been able to cry so loud as that, Joe's mother assured Joe's baby's mother.

And Althea, having looked at him just once to make sure that he really was sound and straight, with the usual number of hands and feet, fingers and toes, whispered:

"Take him to Joe—to—cure him."

Joe was awake. He was raised up on his elbow and his eyes were terrible. Would it be safe? she thought, quailing. Who knew what wild fancy might seize him? But she stood her ground, holding that bundle of flannel which Althea had sent to Joe.

"Little son," she said, softly; "here's something Althea wants you to take care of." She came nearer to the agonized face. "Something for you to keep warm under your splendid old bearskin."

She pulled down the black pelt, watching his face intently. Would it soften to understanding?

There was motion within the flannel bundle, a sound—and a hand came forth, groping. Joe's finger touched it questioningly, and the hand closed upon it masterfully. Joe looked at it for a long time, then drew the bundle under and locked up at his mother sanely.

"How is she?"

"Well. Perfectly all right."

He gave a long steady look at her face to make sure she spoke the truth, and then, with his son's strong hand holding him, relaxed and slept. But now his face was no longer dreadful.

AND Althea was sleeping. Mrs. Mack began to realize that she was tired—tired almost beyond what it is possible to endure. Yet—one must go down to the furnace—one must cook—what there was to cook—must consider whether there was anything in the house that could be sold to buy food and warmth just a little longer until the children should be able to face the problem in their young, strong way. She was so old—so tired. She must have made mistakes, somehow, or they would never have come to this pass.

In the hall she saw the box which she had brought down with her the night before and brightened for a moment. How pleased Althea would be when she woke! Strange—so strange! Had it really been her mother the child had seen?

Yes, there they were, dainty old fashioned little things. What embroidery! Like frost work. Women were more careless now in their stitches. Such long, sweeping skirts! But they must all be washed and bleached. They were yellow with their almost fifty years of lying away.

And then—then—she came upon the Purple Lady's message. For under everything there was a book and an envelope—a big lady's countenance and that person's last claim to beauty vanished.

—but he will! Now do go and sit with him. Let him feel your hand when he wakes. The sound of snow flicking against the window is so desolate. I'm afraid it will make him think—of those things. When you are there it is almost as if I were allowed to go in. I'll go on with this bolero and—then you'll look in the little trunk, if you aren't too tired? I suppose it was only a

These Tarragona Love Affairs! One Must Be as Handy with the Sword and Pistol as with the Softly Whispered Compliment

HILARY MAIDSTONE, lieutenant, commanding the destroyer Hornet, accepted with some satisfaction the consul's invitation to dine.

"If I show extreme appetite at the meal don't blame me," he said. "We have just finished a gunnery and practice stunt in the Grecian islands, and I've tasted nothing better than tough goat and ancient chicken for a month."

"Tarragona can go one better than that, anyhow," said the consul, who was young. "And there's always the port."

"Yes; there's always the port. What sort of an old place is Tarragona, anyway? I've never been here before, and I don't know why I'm here now, except that I believe I'm supposed to be protecting British interests, and so forth."

"I asked for you." The consul's voice was mild. "It occurred to me that you might come in handy in case of sickness. Tell you the truth, I'm rather uneasy at times—those troubles in Barcelona seem to have spread a bit—underground, you know. It's a pretty fiery province when all's said and done. The average Tarragonan is like his native wine—doesn't become innocuous till he's about 60 years old. Up to that age he's fiery and fond of a scrap. There might be useful experience to be picked up here in the next few days, Maidstone."

"Usual police work, I suppose. Well, anything for a change. You don't want me to march up a dozen bluejackets and mount a guard at your front door, though, do you?"

"Hardly that; I shan't be mixed up much. But if refugees should take shelter under the mane of the British lion it might strengthen my hand if it were known I could call assistance at a moment's notice. I'm glad you can dine, though."

"Well, and apart from revolutions and such like, what is there in Tarragona?" The naval officer was frankly curious.

"O, the usual thing—bands playing at night, plenty of dust, a few quarrels amongst the muleteers, a lot of wine bibbing, and—yes, there are any amount of pretty women, and there's a lot of ancient remains."

"I see—the ancient remains act as duennas to the pretty women—eh?"

Forbes laughed. "You will have your joke. I mean Romain remains, Moorish affairs, and heaven knows what. Archaeological—that's the word. Some of the streets are a bit quaint, well worth seeing. I'm awfully busy just now, too."

The commander of the Hornet took a cigaret from a box on the paper-littered table, lit it leisurely, and picked up his sun helmet.

"You're an inhospitable beast, anyway," he remarked, and went out into the blinding glare of a Spanish midsummer sun. But it took considerable effort to drag himself away from those dark, alluring shadows under the arched entrance—more than once he hesitated, looking back.

"A British sailor ought to be impervious to sun," he cogitated, and walked the length of the street, wishing heartily that the Spaniards would find some substitute for whitewash wherewith to adorn their houses. The reflected glare was so trying to the eyes that he was not to blame for cannoning heavily into a pompous little Spaniard who was walking rapidly in the opposite direction. So rapidly, indeed, that the force of the impact sent him reeling off the high pavement into the gutter. By some mischance a careful Spanish housewife had been washing down her patio, and the dirty water had collected in a pool at the precise spot where the gentleman landed.

"Steady on," quoth Hilary, reaching out a muscular arm in the endeavor to drag the don back to safety.

But the Spaniard seemed entirely to misconstrue the action. He swung a little to one side, tripped, and fell on hands and knees in the filth.

"Now you've done it," said the sailor, manfully repressing a desire to laugh. "Why on earth couldn't you look where you were going? Come, come! What's the use of looking pistols and daggers at me in that fashion? Give me your hand and——"

"Señor Englishman, your effrontery is unbounded," stammered the fallen man; and for the first time Hilary scanned him closely. It was then he saw the elaborate clothing of the gentleman plainly—some important function was apparently afoot, and the unfortunate pedestrian was dressed for the occasion.

"Sorry—but it wasn't my fault. Here—take my handkerchief; it isn't half so bad as it seems. You speak good English, sir, so there's no need for me to try my immature Spanish on you; but, believe me, I'm heartily sorry for the mischance."

"It is all on a par with the insolence of your misguided country," grated the Spaniard hotly. "You add insult to injury, señor." He struck the extended hand away, scowled fiercely into Maidstone's bronzed face, and stalked off with a mien that endeavored to make light of his personal disarray.

"I'd better get to the ruins," murmured the sailor. "I don't seem to get on exactly with the inhabitants, somehow."

He suddenly became aware of the frenzied heat of the sun; at right angles to the course he was pursuing a cañon-like street opened invitingly. Hemmed in on either side by lofty houses, narrow, the full beat of the sun did not penetrate there, and on an impulse he swerved into its shade. Then he breathed an appreciative sigh as his eyes, accustoming themselves to the subdued light, took in the scene. It was a street in Tarragona, ordinary enough in itself, perhaps, but to the unaccustomed eye beautiful. The prison-like outer walls of the houses were broken here and there with high, narrow doors, nail-studded and forbidding; the small windows were balconied in fantastic, twisted iron; every window sill was a garden, and the scent of flowers innumerable fought down the prevalent odor of dust and garlic, and conquered handsomely. Save for an occasional woman bearing a waterpot or a basket of vegetables, the street was deserted. Maidstone found himself thinking of some quaint old cathedral close in England; he breathed deeply, took off his hat, and stared up at the narrow ribbon of sky overhead.

IT was the deep, stirring sound of a guitar that awakened him from his reverie; he listened entranced, for if one thing had been needed to make the scene perfect it was such music as this. He began to realise something of the romance and mystery of Spain as he stood there—he, a man surfeited with science and mechanical lore, a twentieth century naval officer who believed in the present and condemned the past as impossible, conjured up visions of enticing faces, pouting lips, dark eyes, and wonderful coronets of braided hair. The music throbbed on, and a full, rich voice broke out; something near the man's heart seemed to tighten suddenly; there was a catching sensation at the back of his throat.

"Jove! What a voice!" he murmured, lifting his eyes upwards. He started back in surprise. Leaning over the balcony near at hand was the embodiment of his mental vision—a living, glowing woman, so beautiful that it seemed to him God's handiwork had reached its zenith. For one second his eyes met hers full; the next a ripe flush mantled her brow and cheek; she turned hastily away and disappeared.

"Ruins!" ejaculated Hilary Maidstone. "Who on earth would bother himself with ruins after seeing a sight like that?" But, though he listened for several moments, the music did not recommence, and he retraced his steps into the blinding street beyond.

But he realized that some indefinable change had come over him since last he stood on the baking pavement. He was an average healthy man, and he had flirted his way through a couple of months at Malta, had been épris with pretty English girls at the Rock, had even counted himself inconsolable when a fascinating widow at Cairo had married a civilian there. Never in all his life, however, had he been so deeply stirred as now.

"I don't pretend to be a psychologist, and I'm a gunner—not an expert in the emotions; but if I'm not in love with that girl I'd like to know what's the matter with me." He sighed as he thought on the sheer impossibility of it all, and "falling in love at first sight is rot—it can't happen. I expect I've got a touch of sun," he said. "But—well, Forbes might know her."

Forbes, busy with official correspondence, looked up as the naval man danced through the patio and struck him soundly between the shoulders.

"Confound you! Remember my rheumatism!" he growled.

"Rheumatism? O, come off it, Forbes. Who lives in the fourth house up the side street off the Calle Isabella?"

"Be a bit more vague, you ass! As if I were a walking directory of Tarragona!"

"Can't you find out? Can't——"

"O, come back in half an hour and command me. I don't know what you want, but it's yours, even to the half of my kingdom. Meanwhile, vamos! I must finish this job."

Hilary departed again, turning over various projects in his mind. A long experience of Spain and Italy told him that to force himself upon the girl he had seen was impossible; unless Forbes himself were able to effect an introduction he was up against as big a problem as he had ever tackled.

For the prescribed half hour the sailor plodded any whither, taking small heed to the fashion of his going. Time dragged wearily; his early elation was vanishing before a profound dissatisfaction with the order of things as existent in Spain. Rolling organ music from behind a stiff leathern curtain across a church door drew him thither; the profound melancholy of the sound was in tune with his thoughts. He lifted the fringed curtain and entered, baring his head instinctively, and for a while searched what was, by comparison with the outer brilliancy, extreme darkness, with unseeing eyes. But gradually objects became visible, and in a remote corner two figures sprang into view. He watched them uninterestedly, but a moment later he recognised one of the two men for the bedizened popinjay he had unintentionally floored that afternoon.

"You'd be a pleasant sort of an animal to meet on a dark night, anyhow," he said to himself. "There's a sort of cutthroat air about you that I don't like. However, that's your own affair, I suppose."

The church offered no further interest; the organ had switched to a rippling melody that merely tantalised him; he left and walked moodily back to the consulate.

"It simply amounts to this," he said to Forbes without preamble. "I've got to know that girl, or else something will happen. I've fought it out with myself, and I've come to the conclusion that—that——"

"For heaven's sake, get it off your chest! Here—have a drink, and come along to this wonderful house you talk of. If there's anything I can do I'm quite prepared to do it, for old time's sake."

Once more Maidstone stood in view of the balcony that for one bewitching moment had been the casket which held a peerless gem.

"It's that house there. I tell you, Forbes, I shan't be able to sleep until I know who she is."

The consul whistled softly, and turned to regard his companion with a serious mien.

"You've made an almighty bad choice, old chap," he said. "That's old Don Antonio de Bazan's house—he's alcalde here, and he hates Britishers like poison. The girl you saw must be his daughter—of course she must. I know her—know her mother, too; but it never struck me that she was anything out of the ordinary."

"It's not the mother I'm thinking about, you ass!"

"Nor I. I was thinking of Señorita de Bazan—Dolores her name is. She's pretty as prettiness goes hereabouts, yes; and I know half a hundred girls in England who could eclipse her and who'd suit you better as wives."

"I'm not a Mormon, thanks. One wife is all I need. As for your bigoted insularity and your infernal superiority—rats! When can you take me to call?"

"Not before tomorrow—there's a good deal of formality necessary here, you know. But I'll do my best then. And meanwhile, I think a bath and a smoke would do you more good than to stand mooning with your hat in your hand."

"Eh-what? Why, so it is."

II.

AN elderly servant handed a glass of something iced to Maidstone with the air of one gentleman obliging another, and the sailor took it absently. "If she doesn't come in soon, I'm going," he thought. And he assured Señora de Bazan that he considered Spain was the finest country in the world, and Tarragona the heart of the jewel. He was painfully aware that his immaculate linen suit had lost its original beauty; his hands, as they held the long glass, seemed to him but little better than two vast chunks of raw steak. Forbes, in halting Spanish, was discussing something with a second elderly female, and wishing that Maidstone was dead instead of having brought him into this chamber of horrors. Then quite suddenly a change came over the apartment. A soft rustle of draperies sounded close at hand; Maidstone leaped to his feet, and stood frankly staring at the vision in the doorway. He saw that the girl reddened slowly under his intent gaze, but for once his breeding played him false. He was staring her out of countenance, but he was cruelly unaware of the fact.

"For goodness' sake, you fool, don't look like an ass!" came an urgent appeal at his elbow, and Forbes swung him to one side. The girl came forward, still rosy, and held out a dainty hand to the consul.

"Good afternoon, Señor Forbes," she said demurely. "But why call your friend names?" She looked at Maidstone sideways, and what she saw must have pleased her, for she gave a little smile that lit up her face wonderfully.

"Oh! he's used to it—they're only terms of endearment," assured the consul. "Permit me, Señorita de Bazan—El teniente Maidstone, Mr. Hilary Maidstone of the Royal Navy, at present commanding the destroyer in the harbor."

Maidstone bowed impressively and wished his face was not the color of a beet; but a tiny hand, the softest and whitest he had ever seen, was graciously extended, and over it he found himself murmuring something that he never afterwards remembered save that he wished to kick himself for being such a fool as to say it.

Dolores de Bazan looked at him again as he straightened, and although now his eyes were not so cruel she reddened once more.

"After all, we're not total strangers, señorita," said the sailor ponderously. He was gratified beyond measure that the girl spoke English as fluently as he did himself; he would have cut a still worse figure had he been compelled to rely on the Castilian. "I heard you sing yesterday, and saw you——"

"Then it was you who stood in the street beneath?" she asked.

His heart leaped; she had remembered. Vaguely he felt disposed to say that life could hold no greater joy for him than perpetually to stand beneath her window, but fear of seeming a fool restrained the words.

"I've never listened to such music in my life," he said earnestly. "I never wish to listen to any other now——"

"I knew it was bad, but not so bad as that." She laughed merrily, revealing pearly teeth.

"It was divine," he assured her solemnly. "I only wish that I might listen to it all my life." And he thought: "She'll know you're a fool now; even if she didn't before."

But perhaps Dolores was accustomed to fulsome flatteries; it is likely that she was, for in Spanish almost every speech is heavy with the flowers of compliment. She did not change color, but her eyes traveled slowly over his wholesome face, and once or twice she smiled quietly. Then she turned pale, and furtively pressed one hand on the place of her bosom.

"What is it?" inquired Maidstone.

"Nothing—the heat of the room, señor."

In the dim street he turned a dumfounded look on his friend.

"Did you ever hear of such amazing luck?" he questioned. "Of all the devilish fates that ever dogged a man, could anything have been more diabolical? The one man whose favor I ought to have cultivated is the very man I shoved into a ecstacy went with the grip of a vise and the knife dropped with a tinkle to the pavement.

"They'll be completely out of hand in a little while," surmised the consul calmly. Voices, lifted in shrill tones, assured listening ears that the troops had refused to fire on the mob.

The World Outside

Silver Ribbon Fiction

THE STORY THUS FAR.

An adventure for $10,000—this is the bizarre offer made to Cellingswood Jeremiah Bancroft, who has just inherited his father's $7,000,000 by a stranger who says he represents the Great Adventure company, and who is routed into Jerry's remarkable dwelling by a terrific storm. Jerry, sitting among his coins and the 1,500 books he is reading, at first scoffs and then ponders, recalling his father's mysterious death, yet to be solved, and his own sheltered, uneventful 24 years. He fails to notice the malevolent looks that the stranger darts at him. The man explains that he has sold many successful adventures and that Jerry's is to begin at once, provided he signs a contract to go into the great world outside and meet it. Jerry is pondering over a memorandum in his father's effects when the bell rings—and out of the storm comes a girl, rain-drenched and in distress. It appears she is an actress; her car has broken down; she has walked five miles. Jerry escorts her on a drive to the nearest railroad station for New York.

THIRD INSTALLMENT.

The Beginning of Adventure.

"NOW, I'm going with you, to see that you get there properly. This Williams is a surly dog, and not above demanding more than ten, after he had you half way."

"O, no!" she protested. "It's not to be thought of. I refuse to put you to all this trouble. It isn't fair."

"Better get used to the notion. I'm going with you."

"I know you must be mystified by my coming out of the night in this queer fashion, but it can be explained in a few words. A telegram came this morning announcing the death of a man who had been like a father to me before he became a paralytic. He died penniless; and in arranging for the funeral expenses I missed my train. Some one said I could make a train here; so I hired a car. That broke down absolutely, five miles back. After waiting for an hour I got out and walked."

"Walked?—through the mud and rain for five miles?"

"There was nothing else to do. I was pretty tired when I reached your kindly door. I left nearly all the money I had with the undertaker. My work makes it impossible for me to return for the funeral."

"And all for a dog!"

"I suppose I am a fool!"

"No, no. I think that's fine. I wonder if I'd do the same?"

"Of course, you would!" She smiled again, drawing another from him.

"I wonder if that pup will ever realize what a lucky pup he is?" And immediately Bancroft thought that that was fairly well turned for a bumpkin.

To the young woman, however, the phrase—or the flattery in the bracket of it—was as old as the hills. But men would go on using it until the crack of doom. All pretty women had to submit their ears to this kind of twaddle. In this instance it was not particularly distasteful to her, because the young man's gray eyes had only honest admiration in them.

"Anything that depends upon you absolutely is a sacred obligation, even if it's only a dog; and if you ignore it you aren't worth much."

"That's a fact."

When they reached the car he was for taking the seat with the driver; but she would not hear of it.

"Please sit with me."

"All right. Step on 'er, Williams," he said, breezily; and the car began to move.

Bancroft sensed a wine in his veins that was not born of the purple grape. The Great Adventure company—forsooth! As if adventures were such events as might be prescribed and taken like medicine, whether one liked it or not! All his life he had wanted something on this order to befall his lot—to succor a young and pretty woman in distress. What pleased him immeasurably was the absence of that shyness he had often anticipated, should an episode such as this happen. The tumult in his veins, then, was one of pleasure and delight; there was no embarrassment whatever.

Out of the night she had come and back into the night she would go. She had not given her name and he had not offered his. If she wanted to know to whom she was obligated, she must ask. Somewhere he had read that a gentleman (in such a situation) did not offer his name until the unknown lady signified that she wanted to know it, otherwise it was subtle trespass. Tomorrow she would become a memory; pleasantly to recast so long as he lived.

That she did not ask his name or offer hers was due to a simple fact: she had scented the taint of wine on his breath. This, together with the recollection of the splendid books and vases, had forced her reluctantly to substitute for her first impression another, that he might not be the guileless country boy he seemed. So, during the rather wild ride, she became watchful and reserved. She regretted that she had not let him take the front seat. But then, it was only here in the stuffy tonneau that she discovered the taint in his breath. Perhaps there was an edge of sadness to her thought, that she must always be watchful and reserved among men, that true comradeship did not enter (at least, had not in her case) the artificial life of the stage.

The wind had risen again, and the automobile top and sides rumbled and snapped so continuously that sustained conversation was most difficult, and after a few desultory phrases about the weather, they became verbally silent. They were frequently jounced, the road being dirt, rutty and puddled and greasy. Time after time they were thrown heavily together; but Bancroft took no hurt from this or discomfort. His one regret was that the journey would be comparatively short. Once the sharp corner of the Jaipur box stung his elbow.

The journey exceeded an hour and a quarter. Arriving at the wayside station, they found the eleven o'clock train had come and gone; but the twelve was on schedule. Bancroft wanted to remain until train time, but Williams objected boorishly.

AS Williams had the car going, Bancroft had to jump aboard.

"You're a surly codger, Williams."

"I be, huh? Well, I ain't goin' t' hang around th' depot so's you can talk with th' girl. She paid me; nothin' for me t' wait for, is there? It's late, an' I want t' get back home."

"If you were ten years younger I'd punch your head."

"Well, I ain't ten years younger."

Bancroft looked back, but the strange young woman had entered the waiting room.

"Where'd she come from?" asked Williams, after a few minutes.

"I don't know"—rather absently, for his veins were still echoing their recent delight.

"O, you don't know, huh? What's a young woman doin' at your house this time o' night?"

"None of your infernal business, you old crook!"

"Who you callin' crook?"

"You!"

"Young man, that's libel, defamation of char'kter. I can git you hauled up for that. Anyhow, I can make you walk. You ain't payin' me no fare t' lug you back t' town. Git out!"

"Try getting me out!" replied Bancroft, belligerently. "Two dollars is generally your top price for this job, and you imposed upon the unfortunate when you charged this young woman ten."

"Unfortunate, is she? Huh! So that's th' kind. . . ."

All Bancroft's pent-up wrath of years against the village and its inhabitants broke through the weakened barriers; and he let the deluge fall upon Williams' head. "All my life my father and I have been ostracized because some one called him a miser and the rest of you took it up. Now you're going to hear my opinion of you and the rest of the villagers. You're mean. Your minds are obscene; for you see evil in all things you do not understand, and hope for the worst. You never offer the boot unless the object is down. You go to church Sundays, not to worship God, but to give your wives a chance to pick up any gossip they missed during the week. You are ready to stone the beggar and lick the rich man's boots—as presently you'll try to lick mine. Here's some gossip for you. My father left me nearly seven millions. Do you get that? Seven millions! And you won't get one single horse trough out of me, not a single trough. That's that!"

Perhaps it was the invisible impact of so much money that caused Williams' hands to falter, or it might have been a simple hole in the road. Whatever the cause was, the car swerved unexpectedly and plunged into the shallow ditch. The engine gave a loud whoof in protest and stopped.

"Now look what you went an' done!" gasped Williams, plaintively.

This was too much for Bancroft's wrath, which evaporated, and a rush of boyish laughter followed. He regretted that his tongue had run away with him. He had intended that the village should live in wonder as to how much his father had left. Now the whole town would know about the millions in the morning.

It took a quarter of an hour to coax the engine out of its sulks. For five minutes the car slithered back and forth in the effort to regain the road. This accomplished, the vehicle careened toward home.

"Seven millions, huh?" said Williams, after they had covered three miles. "Mebbe I wouldn't touch a dollar of it."

"You never will."

Williams had his revenge in a minor degree. Bancroft was forced to walk home from the garage. As he swung back the gate he fell into laughter again. He had entered upon this adventure with $10,000 in his pocket! So much for a pretty face. Still, she might have asked where to send old Mrs. Horne's shoes and stockings.

He entered the house, tossed his hat and slicker upon the hall chair, put out the lights and went up to his room. He sat on the edge of the bed for awhile and tried to marshal the events, but either the girl got in the adventurer's way or he got in her's; Bancroft could not concentrate upon either with any success. He smiled. Who could say? The advent of the girl might be an earnest of what the Great Adventure Company was capable of offering its clients. If so, he was rather inclined toward a contract. Manstuff only. Well, you never could tell. One thousand down, wasn't it, and nine upon the happy completion of the cycle? This time his smile was less humorous than ironical.

And yet, how oddly the man had fondled that antique chair and what a singularly beautiful thing his smile had been!

He yawned, undressed and got into bed, and in a little while Somnus brought forth his blackest nightmare and Bancroft was condemned to ride it through the night. Up and down the world, into far countries, and always the unknown young woman beckoned him on, but with the adventurer's smile. Ships foundered under him and men tried to take his life. . . . Battle, murder, and sudden death! (The concrete phrases that we hear during the daytime and how loosely they wander through our dreams at night!) Over seas of rocking water, over mountains of slithering gold, still passionately he pursued her.

NOW, then, before the seller of adventures departed the village he drew up before the hostelry and blew his horn three times, sharply, and waited. Almost at once a young man hurried out and approached the car.

"Russian and watch him, Shadow. Follow wherever he goes, and never let him see you. Report by wire anything unusual."

"All right, professor."

"Plenty of money?"

"Yes, sir."

The professor nodded; and the car went on, into the storm and the night.

The young man called Shadow returned to the hotel veranda and watched the red tail light until a bend in the road shut it in behind it. Queer old bird; something loony about him, for all his intellect. What was his game, anyhow? And what part in the cast had this poor country boob and his money? Well, the old boy knew what he was about, and it didn't pay to question or cross him. He had a way of boiling up furiously; and in those moments he was bad medicine to brook.

Yes, sir; a queer old bird. Every matinée day you'd find him in the parade, up Broadway or down, peering oddly into the faces of the women—the young ones. Nothing raw about the way he did it; more like a painter seeking a special model. Once he had taken the liberty to quiz the old boy.

"What are you hunting for, professor?"

"A smile."

"But not the one I seek, Shadow."

There was the emerald company, too. All on the level, not a nail out of plumb; really dug up emeralds and sold them. But ever against this, the Great Adventure company, which was about as logical as old George W. Perpetual Motion; and there wasn't one chance in a million of this boob here falling for it. And what was going to happen if he did sign the contract? Some fool movie stuff? Well, well; his job was to watch Friend Jeremiah, and watch him he would, from pancakes to prayers.

Meantime, there could be no harm in convincing a certain village smarty that kelly pool was an art all by itself. Humming a popular air, the Shadow reëntered the hotel.

The professor—evidently known as such by his few intimates—arrived in New York at twelve. He turned the car into a garage and took the elevated downtown to Fourteenth street. Eventually he turned into Twelfth street and entered an apartment house. The apartment consisted of three rooms with bath. The furniture was comfortable and substantial, but the lack of style and uniformity intimated that these objects had been purchased indifferently. The living room was lined with bookshelves, but the books were battered and soiled from passage after passage through second-hand bookshops. There were no pictures on the walls, no photographs.

The occupant, having no servant, proceeded to make himself a cup of tea, which he drank thoughtfully. He got out of his clothes, but abstractedly, which resulted in a disorder of their placement.

All this while there had been no expression on his lean handsome face to imply that he considered his business in the country a success or a failure; but he swung himself into bed heavily, after the fashion of a man weary in mind and body.

He turned on the reading light and reached for the book on the bed-stand. It was Burton's "The Anatomy of Melancholy." He opened the volume at the marker, and began to read; and soon became absorbed in this remarkable analysis of mental depression.

Sometimes we seek books, not in idle amusement, but in hope that we may find some example which will either excuse our conduct or cure it.

At one o'clock the young woman with the Jaipur box came to the door of a brick dwelling with marble steps and window-ledges, in Ninth street. With no sound beyond the opening and closing click of the latch, she tiptoed into the hall and up the first flight of stairs, and let herself into a room which faced the yards. She closed the door and turned on the light simultaneously.

A Pekingese puppy, gray-brindle, black of face, with a coat so fine and thick and soft that it rivaled spun silk, dashed toward her with such expressions of joy and welcome and love-madness, that the girl fell upon her knees, swept the puppy to her throat and rocked with him.

"Hush, hush!," she whispered, to still the puppy's whimpering. "Sh! O, Ling Foo, Ling Foo! What shall I do? I can't give you up, and I can't leave this place . . .

red dowagers, their flossy but expensive daughters, everything expensive except the waiters' underclothes, he thought. The three treasury notes, the last of the money he had fought for, shivered in his pocket. They felt desperately lonely, but he managed to say, "Fact is I don't like the curtains in the other room. They don't go with your hair." He filled up Vera's glass. Vera looked at the young man with unconcealed amazement mingled with admiration. Something had gone very wrong indeed. He had meant to take her to that other room. This was the wrong room. She was convinced of it. He had only gulped when she referred to it, but—well—he had gulped down a fairy kingdom. She did not quite understand, for the whole difference could not amount to more than a few pounds. Her subliminal perceptions had noted tragedy, loss, the crash of hope. A few pounds did not represent the equivalent, not to a young man who called for one in a primitive motor. His words of explanation, her hair, the curtains, how dear of him, but how he had overacted that drawl, that bombastic refilling of her glass. So like the hero in a drawing-room drama. Yet it thrilled and flattered her. The game was in the hands of her host, not hers to force it. She played up to his lead and awaited developments.

"They don't match my hair, the wrong shade of red to go with russet, but how discerning of you, Lance. How—as my cook says—'The quality are quare and particular.'"

A waiter removed with a flourish a cover which revealed a duckling demanding inspection, admiration of its perfect browning. "I do not like its complexion, still less its figure." Lance halted, embarrassed by the suggestion of the last word. "I am sure it was a slacker, still we ordered it. Shall we have it carved, Vera?"

"We must not hurt its feelings." Vera played up gaily; she felt anxious and sad. The very teeth of this man's soul were chattering; his voice, which was so gay, seemed to be calling up to her from hell. What was it? What was it? She could hardly bear the pain of his gaiety.

"Shall we have another bottle with the duckling?"

"O, no, Lance, please. We have been happy with this bottle, haven't we? It would be cruel to give it a rival. Let us be true to it as though it was a person who had made us happy. Can't I take it home with me?"

"The head waiter won't let you," he said grimly. "He won't be a fairy waiter much longer."

"It's a long way from twelve o'clock, Lance." A silence fell on them; but one may eat duckling in silence, and Vera could bear it better than tragic gaiety. Somehow she felt that the explanation was near, that the man had to have silence that his thoughts might form; but at last she broke it. "I am glad that it is a long way from twelve. I sha'n't mind running home in one slipper after such a jolly party."

"You won't have to run home that way, Vera. The pumpkin coach is paid for in advance, but the party won't last till twelve. It's practically over now." Lance knew when the limit of human endurance had been reached. He was game, but he could no longer bear the melting, sympathetic eyes which almost seemed to say, "I love you." Each exquisite smile was gained on false pretenses. The affair had to end.

"When you give a party in the wrong room Cinderella has to—O, what's the good of keeping it up. The fact is, Mrs. Toynways——"

"Mrs. Toynways!"

"Yes—Vera for the night—it's over—don't make me say why—only forgive me for sending you home by yourself—in the motor—now."

"You must explain, Lance, you must. If I was a man you'd let me be a friend. He'd make you explain; then he'd help you."

"It's too ugly. If it had come off—but it didn't; put it down to shell shock; that explains most things nowadays."

"I sha'n't move from this table, Lance. You can't make me. Put it down to idle curiosity if you like."

The man laughed unpleasantly. "The head waiter can move you, though, when he stops being a fairy. Please, Mrs. Toynways."

Vera gathered her determination into her eyes.

"No!" she said with absolute finality.

Lance, looking at the woman he loved and was about to lose under such sordid circumstances, realized his helplessness. He had not even a bad cheque to offer the manager. "No doubt," he thought, "a more experienced adventurer could have carried off the situation; but an amateur, a mere beginner, what chance had he? All the same, with a miserable attempt at bravado, he flung words across the table. He wanted to hurt, he wanted others to suffer as he was suffering. "Well, then, if you will have it, I am an adventurer."

THE eyes which were holding and searching him flinched and hardened, but they were even yet the eyes of a judge who hopes that the accused will somehow clear himself. There was pain. Illusions, ideals, beliefs were threatened. "An adventurer! I see; but surely amateurish, and that is only the end of the story. I want to know the beginning. I will know the beginning, the whole story. You owe it to me. There are things which you have said to me which give me the right to demand this. No woman can bear to think that she has shared her—her thoughts with a rotter. I don't believe—I can't believe—— Please——"

There was that in the voice which broke down the pitiful jerry-built walls of cynicism and bravado. The well shod Lance of the unwavering eyes penetrated to the heart of things. Suddenly the man seemed to hear his own voice breaking through the bubble and music of the restaurant. He was just a lonely, miserable child pouring out its woes to a Madonna woman who stood behind the judge.

"It's no use pretending that I didn't want to marry you. That's why I asked you here tonight. I wanted you to think I was rich and had something to offer. All my life I had dreamed that by the time I was twenty-five I would have a fortune to offer the woman I loved. Why, even when I was only five my mother was showing me a colored picture book—I think it was the ten little nigger boys." He paused, looking back through twenty years of consciousness to a high moment of his childhood.

"Go on," breathed the insistent voice across the table. "Ten little nigger boys—go on." The judge entered; the Madonna woman smiled.

"There was a picture in the book, a nigger girl in a beautiful yellow dress, and a nigger man in a frock coat; they sat one on each side of a wonderful fireplace, the flames in the grate were scarlet and purple and gold; they, I mean the nigger man and girl, looked very happy. They were married and that was their home. I seemed to want what they had more than any toy I have ever longed for. I envied them. I wanted to be that nigger man."

The elusive hungry look which Vera had noticed a year ago suddenly explained itself.

"My mother said that it would be twenty years before I could have a fireplace of my very own, and even then I'd have to work and work like that nigger. It was a funny sort of thing to make a fellow work, but I did work. I wasn't a slacker. I got scholarships and things. I thought I'd never get to twenty-five and have all that——"

"All that the nigger man had," said the voice of the Madonna woman across the table. "No!" this to the waiter who was hovering round the table with a menu waiting to intrude it in a tactful interlude. "I don't want chocolate souffle, and I don't want fruit salad. I don't want any more of anything." She waved him away. He went.

"Oh, well, when I was nineteen, when I was grown up, I thought of it in other ways, but it came to that, and it was only six years away. Then the war came and I knew after a time that all my work had gone for nothing. Of course I could have married. All the chaps were marrying, but they weren't having——"

"Flames of purple and scarlet and gold under a marble mantelpiece," said the voice across the table.

"No! It was different what they married for. I waited for——"

"Your ideal, perhaps." The voice was soft as the spirit of tears.

"But they had something. I had nothing. When I was knocked out and labeled for the 'West,' I thought I'd been a fool to wait and never know, never have anything. Then the war was over and then I met you and I was glad I'd waited. I had nothing to offer you, but I'd pulled off a stunt or two in the war and such funny, flabby things were making pots of money and the papers were full of advertisements. There seemed to be thousands of people wanting men with a little capital and a lot of energy. Put it down to shell shock if you like, but I believed them, everything they said. Truth is that as far as the world was concerned I was still nineteen. A man in the regiment lent me rooms in the Albany until he wanted them. He'll never want them now. He went last week—Mesopotamia—so that's over. I had my pre-war knit. It was easy for me to keep afloat, but I couldn't make any headway. I couldn't get nearer anything to offer you; all the money seems to belong to women nowadays. The war, I suppose. Why, even our family property in Galway belongs to an aunt. Everything's reversed. It wasn't for want of trying, but I couldn't make good, couldn't get anything to offer you, and of course I knew there were men who had. I used to day dream for a time—you on the other side of that fireplace."

"Flames of purple and scarlet and gold," said the voice of the woman. The judge and the Madonna had vanished.

"What's the good of talking of it? Looks as if I was whining, blaming the world for my own folly. I'm not. You're making me tell you instead of taking my word for it, that I'm not fit to be with you here. But you'll understand in a moment and then you'll go, before the head waiter turns nasty."

WITH an almost cynival frankness he described to Vera Toynways the five treasury notes laid out like a poker hand on the table and the head of Queen Victoria which decided the matter.

"I certainly was rather a long shot under the circumstances," some feminine hurt crept into the voice across the table—a psychoanalyst would have said that the woman was jealous of the horse.

"If we had not come to the wrong room you might never have known. I suppose I'm always going to the wrong room. Wrong rooms for wrong 'uns—What!" Another miserable attempt at bravado.

"Don't," pleaded Vera. "It's torment for a woman to have to think she has put faith in—in a false god. It's bad for a woman——"

"Oh, you needn't think I didn't care. If things hadn't gone wrong tonight at least you'd have known how I cared. There's never been another woman in all my life, except—" a whimsical smile broke through the misery on the young man's face—"except the nigger girl in the picture book. When you know how I cared you might have said 'Yes' and then when I had to tell you I was a pauper you might have thought it didn't really matter. The odds were all against me. I knew that, but I was desperate. I saw no other way. Well, I've lost and now you know what sort of a rotter I am. Please, won't you go?"

"In the pumpkin coach—paid for in advance?"

"Anything, only go. I'm—I'm at the end of my grip."

"Darling!" The voice of the woman was more like a spirit voice speaking from another world than a sound in the restaurant babble.

"What!" Lance Dermot, who had been leaning miserably on the table, was galvanised into change as though by the touch of death. His world flashed into glory. He realized at her word that there was after all no condemnation in the eyes which had ceased to search his soul, only a vast pity, understanding, and the love of a woman trying to heal his wounds.

"I want"—something of the elusive hunger of the man seemed to have transferred itself wistfully into the voice—"I want to be the nigger girl in the yellow dress. I want to sit opposite to you on the other side of that fireplace with flames of scarlet and purple and gold."

"O, Vera, do you mean——"

"Yes; but you'd have to work like the nigger man, for I've got an awful lot of business to look after. I know I am dreadfully swindled—I—I want a nigger man of my very own. You are right—too much of the wealth of the world in the hands of women—in weak hands. I don't want it, Lance dear; but, O! I do want to be happy. Let us go and dance once, just for joy, and then go home in the pumpkin coach."

And that is what they did.

THE PURPLE LADY

manila envelope. But the book—"For my baby when she grows up" was written at the top of the first leaf.

"DEAR, funny little daughter, sound asleep in your crib, I wonder how and where you'll read this—if you ever do? I'm so puzzled—so puzzled! So afraid I've done something wicked.

"I've just been to see dear old Judge Martin, and at last he has sold those western lands for me. I had told him I wanted the money in cash, and there he sat with it all spread out, but looking sad and stern. And when I told him I wanted it to give your father, so that he could use it to finish his machine—O, dear, how he did lecture me! I don't know—I don't know what to think! I never dreamed before of not believing in your father's success, but when I'm told, so earnestly, that if I let him have my last money for his machine I am robbing you—what can I do? What can I say?

"'I am old fashioned,' he said, 'I know you have promised to obey, but I counsel you now, not only to disobey; I counsel you to deceive. Don't, I beg of you, let him know you have this money!'

"O, my dear baby! I seemed to stand at the edge of a gulf!

"'I will think of what you've said,' I managed to answer, 'but I think I would like to keep the money while I think it over.'

"And so I came home, trying not to cry, with my little fortune, all these great bills—clutched in my hands, and I've written you about it, and put it here under your tiny things, which I must put away today, anyway; you're so big and old now. I'm going to think and think. Perhaps I shall take it out and give it to your father—perhaps I shall give it to Judge Martin to keep again, and perhaps I shall just leave it here, years and years, for you to find when you have a baby some day and need so many many things for it. If anything should happen to me before then, I suppose this is the surest place for you to find it, for all women go poking over baby things some time or other.

"Well, I must leave it now and go down to my preserving and look in on you to see if you are through with your nap—and quite likely tomorrow I shall change my mind—give it to daddy, and burn this silly letter."

Mrs. Mack, breathing a little quickly, but otherwise calm, counted out the old fashioned bills of the seventies, and slipped the envelope into her little black bag. Then she dressed warmly and sensibly, pinning up her old fashioned skirts. A wood sled squeaked by through the drifts, making a path to the village.

She went and stood in Althea's doorway with the box of baby clothes.

"They were there," said she, and spread them about on the cover, so that the girl could examine them without exertion.

"Joe is taking care of the baby," said she, "and I am going to the village. I'll send the doctor. He may come before I get back. And Mrs. Brady. I must see about the phone and—order supplies. Some coal came in yesterday, I heard. I must see why they haven't sent our share."

(Copyright: 1922: By Georgia Wood Pangborn.)

I'm so unhappy! I'm nobody; I don't belong!"

She set the puppy down, picked up the Jaipur box and rose. She gazed about, questioning mutely her trunk, the bureau and the wall-stand. After all, it did not matter where she put the box; there was nothing within it of monetary value, while the box itself was like dozens she had seen in the Fourth avenue shops. It might be worth five dollars, no more. She decided upon the wall-stand, and placed the box there.

Next, she began to prepare for the puppy a dish of condensed milk diluted with warm water, which she heated over an alcohol burner; and while the puppy satisfied its thirst and hunger the girl let down the folding-bed and freshened the pillows.

The room was large, with a clothespress of satisfying dimensions. There was no suggestion of luxury, but all the furnishings intimated comfort and excellent feminine taste. There was a grand piano by one of the windows, and the top of this was littered with songs and opera scores.

Ling Foo, now drowsy with comfort, sat up and begged to be put to bed. The girl smiled. He was so funny. He was worth a hundred miles of mud and rain. He defied melancholy; he was irresistibly an optimist, and his optimism was contagious. So she nestled him between the pillows, from whence he eyed her contentedly, with an occasional wag of the tail as she moved about.

Of all things that live, there is nothing more loving or lovable than a dog—any kind of a dog. He is a human need. Most of us must have something upon which to lavish our affection. If we may not, or dare not, for reasons of shyness or reasons of convention, lavish this affection upon humans, we may safely turn to the dog, who will answer our appeal with all he is, with deathless loyalty, whether we are worthy or not. He has no diversions; he has only one thought, and that is of you. He grieves when you leave him, he welcomes you joyously when you return. If you punish him, he crawls to your feet to be forgiven. He has displeased the object of his love; he doesn't always know how, but he is always sorry. A cat is a luxury, but a dog is a necessity.

AS she took off the borrowed shoes and stockings, she made a little gesture which indicated self-reproach. She would never be able to return the articles. She might, of course, address them blindly to "the house of many books and vases"; but on second thought she dismissed the purpose as ridiculous as well as impractical. She was conscious now of having acted too much upstage without any justification other than that the young man's breath had been tainted with drink. He had played the part of the Good Samaritan perfectly; and she would still be in that dismal village but for his ready courtesy. All the other houses had been almost articulate in their expressions of forbiddingness.

Because of other men unknown to him, this chance benefactor was made to suffer apparent ingratitude. It was the way of the world. One man committed an evil; and like water responding to the stone cast, the ripples reached far and wide, bringing misery and disruption to the innocent. (Of which is the woof and warp of this tale.)

At length she sat upon the bed Turk-wise, in her kimono, and reviewed the salients of the letter she had found in the metal box. A letter, written months gone, in anticipation of his death, while he had yet the use of his voice if not his hands. A dictated letter.

Daddy Bowman, dear old Daddy Bowman! . . . Who had found her outside his studio one morning, years ago! He had never told her about the box and the chain because "it would only have tantalized you and directed you nowhere." She was not an ordinary foundling. Daddy Bowman had always maintained the opinion that she had been stolen for ransom, and some slip in the plans of the rogues had forced them to abandon her at the nearest door, which fortunately had been his. While he lived she had been Daddy Bowman's; now she was nobody's; and it was beyond all possibility that the box and chain would ever lead to her identity. But why had they taken the locket and left the chain? Had one rogue robbed the other?

Darling Daddy Bowman, who had taught her all he knew about music, so that today she was capable of providing for herself! How glad she was, in the midst of her grief, that she had in turn been able to take care of him, to visit him Sundays and to take him flowers! Now he was gone; and tomorrow the muddy earth would cover him forever.

Suddenly she turned and buried her face in a pillow; and then Ling Foo discovered that for once his endearments were unreciprocated.

WHEN he awoke in the early morning, as was his habit, Bancroft sat up in bed, plowed his fingers through his hair and licked his lips. Pah!—what a night! Never any more of that stuff in his goblet. A nightmare was a novelty, but of a character not urgent upon encores. He must have gone to the bottom of the sea ten times, and he could still taste the brine of it . . . or the wine of it!

He grinned, jumped out of bed and threw up the curtains. It was a glorious day. In the yard the ground cobwebs flashed like diamond sunbursts. The upland fields were ruddy and golden brown with stubble and emerald green with winter wheat; and above the fields the wooded heights, with scattered torches of flaming maple. The changing beauty of this vista was eternal; each of the four seasons was a sublime artist. And he might be gazing thitherward for the last time.

What had chained him here? Why hadn't he run away from it all and gone a-venturing as some of the village boys already had? Cowardice? Had he feared his fate too much? Did he love the hills and valleys, while he hated the inhabitants? Had the soil held him? He could not answer. Certainly his father had not held him by any sign or word. Had his motive been greedy: an unexpressed hope that some day he might inherit the house and a little money? He could not recall any such thought coming into the open. He remembered departing for the military training camp, delighted and relieved at the idea that in all probability he would never see the town again. Yet, on his return, a demobilized soldier, the sight of the familiar hills had filled his heart with a joy that nigh burst it. There was no highway for this introspection; it followed along an unbroken wall, baffling and impenetrable.

His thoughts, irked by this invisible impasse, took another direction. Had the girl really taken all that trouble for the sake of a dog? He was conscious of wanting to know this for a certainty, though the wanting had no defined reason for being. Perhaps, in this his first romantical contact with the female of the species, he dreaded disillusion.

His door! Lucky for her, for she would have received scant attention elsewhere, coming out of the night as she had and at that hour. Comely, even in her bedraggled condition, with a smile as compelling as sunshine. Was there really a dog? He would never know, of course; but that did not lessen the wanting. To begin the new day, to enter the new world, with a substantial faith in womankind; perhaps that is what he really wanted.

That he should, being only half awake, begin the day by questioning motives would be due to the insidious poison by which he had been inoculated by the prior visitor—the seller of adventures. The man had stirred numerous doubts, as to the honesty of his errand, as to his identity, his actual though hidden intentions; and as these doubts were still active, the girl naturally fell under the shadow of them.

Why should the girl lie or invent tales, Bancroft argued in her behalf? Why should she tell him there was a dog if there wasn't? He hadn't quizzed her; she had been under no obligation to recount any of her adventures or to offer explanations. Her declarations had been gratuitous. Therefore there was a dog, and she had gone home to him under extreme difficulties, and that was all there was to that. Just the sort of a girl to chase around the world, even in nightmares.

He rued his punctilious regard for the rules of convention, exacted for no other reason than to impress the girl with the fact that he knew how to behave. As if a country bumpkin should know what was what in the world of manners! Why hadn't he boldly given his name and asked for hers? She would be in New York, whither he was bound, but he would have as much chance of finding her as he would in particularizing one grain of sand from another on a vast beach.

That man, though! Bancroft stared at the hills, his brow furrowed. He could not dismiss the notion that the whole affair cloaked entirely another game and that he had been subtly invited to search for it. Hence, the sinister suggestion that had entered his mind the night before and now recurred. No doubt Snell's letter had furnished the background.

Battle, murder, and sudden death—for sale! That was the flaw; it was almost a covert threat. . . . O, pshaw! the whole thing was ridiculous rubbish without ulterior purpose. Perhaps the puzzle—the assumption that there was a "nigger in the woodpile"—arose from the puerility of the scheme and the formidable intellect of the promoter. An ordinary man, promoting such a crazy proposition, wouldn't have been a puzzle but a joke.

The man's laughter—the hollowness of it and the shading mockery—was in itself something to speculate upon. Had he ever known Silas Bancroft? There seemed to be only one way of solving the riddle, and that was to sign the contract, if there was such an instrument. It was no fool's curiosity. If Silas Bancroft had been shocked to death his son wanted to know why and by whom.

First, he would call on Lawyer Snell and get all the business details off the slate; then he would quiz the head clerk, Johnson, as to that gentleman's suspicions that Silas Bancroft had been scared to death. After this he would be free to go where and set how he pleased. Under an assumed name he would find lodgings in some modest rooming house—preferably one of his own—and then he would fare forth in quest of knowledge, for he wanted to learn something about the life of the great city before he essayed to match lances with the Great Adventure Company.

Seven millions!—and what was he going to do with it all? There was no inclination toward clothes and jewelry, expensive automobiles, a New York house with servants. What was to be done to keep the income normal? That was the Old Man of the Sea. Certainly he lacked the miser taint, for there was no desire to add to the fortune or to husband it. What he wanted particularly was a creditable way of getting rid of some of it. Dissipation was out of the question, for he had no provocation. There was, to be sure, the chorus girl. From accounts he had read in newspapers regarding these pretty little spendthrifts, he was now assured that Moloch's reputation was a blasted thing in comparative appetites. They worked so swiftly that it was possible for a man to be ruined and virtuous at the same time. Odd, that there should be so many volumes on how to make money (always a failure) and none on how to spend it (which would naturally be a success). This conceit made him chuckle.

His father came back into his thoughts. The more he mulled it over the more decided he became that the question of his father being a miser seemed open to debate. No one in the village was able to cite definitely a case in point. Perhaps it was because his father had never bothered to refute the allegation, preferring aloofness to defense. Still, there was the miser's son, himself, his cheap clothes, his empty pockets. But this argument was weakened by the knowledge that there were many farmers' sons hereabouts no better off than he, or whose youth had matched his in poverty-strickenness. Yet, that did not seem to hold. The farmers were poor beyond any doubt, while rumor contended that his father was secretly a rich man. It was probably upon this premise that the villagers had built up the father's reputation. There was a miserly touch in all these years of neglect.

IT seemed queer that all his thoughts this morning should be inconclusive. Whichever way they ran they encountered walls. His father, the girl, the seller of adventures, his own problem, all were on the other side of mysterious walls.

The vista caught his eyes again, and he stared for some time at the hill top, and presently the vista dissolved and out of this dissolution came the face of the girl at the moment of her smile. Nothing could be honester than that smile; he did not require experience to discern this; it was palpable. But so had the smile of the adventurer been honest—the tender smile he had addressed to one of those old chairs. More walls. Bancroft rumpled his hair in perplexity. . . .

Love. Well, he hadn't given that much

The Wrong Room

by

There Was a Horse to Wager Upon at Long Odds, and There Was Vera; Lance Flipped the Coin of Destiny

LANCE DERMOT, late captain in the Connemara Rangers, sat before a card table in his borrowed chambers in the Albany. There were no cards on the table. Instead, laid out like a poker hand which has been called, there were five uncreased, uncirculated treasury notes. In a sense those treasury notes did represent a poker hand called by fate, for with the exception of some loose silver they constituted the entire working capital of a young man of twenty-five with expensive tastes and no profession. In both sexes theoretical good looks are very common among the youth of today, but there was a certain thoughtful distinction about Lance Dermot which caused the eye to linger, the mind to speculate about his personality.

Recklessness, controlled by thought-power and will, had been the summary of his Colonel, who had loved and trusted the boy and never been failed in his trust. The lean, eager, wolf-hound face had adopted in Palestine the sun washed desert hue which some men quickly lose because it is foreign to their natures, and others, because they are akin to great spaces, keep forever.

Had it not been for the war young Dermot would have been a barrister. Winchester had educated him, and Oxford—in the one year he had spent there before the war had taken him to its mail-clad bosom—had not spoiled him. He had been one of that minority who had enjoyed and felt at home in the ceaseless adventure. He had not wanted any more of it, though. His young blood had responded to the stimulus. There had been a fever, the fever had been allayed. Then he wanted to be constructive and creative. He had been conscious of power over men of organising ability. He had also been conscious of cynical rebuffs when he put his goods on the labor market. He had about as much knowledge of that market as a young playwright has when rushing diffidently about with his first play. So he had felt after the first week as unwanted as a turkey on Boxing Day.

Two hundred and forty-five pounds gratuity money had been his capital on demobilisation. Two hundred he had put aside to start in business, forty he had regarded as "foolish money," to buy a week of unrestricted fun, the five, which he had earmarked as emergency rations, now lay upon the table in front of him awaiting his decision. With the two hundred he had started as partner in a business which very soon stopped. It had something to do with pipe cleaners; the prospectus had appeared in an agony column advertisement. The foolish money had not cheated him, though. How he had enjoyed that week and through that week he had met Vera Toynways. A dinner dance at some restaurant, a self-made introduction, one of those high moments of tact and daring which require the assistance of destiny.

Vera Toynways had been within two words of crushing the presumption, but Lance Dermot had a shy manner and sunbeams in his smile. When a young man with a shy manner conquers it sufficiently to ask a strange young woman to dance, a subtle compliment is conveyed.

"I know it was awful cheek," he had confided as they danced, "but there is so little time for me—only a week, in fact—before—before I settle down to business in—er—in the city."

VERA TOYNWAYS had a business in the city and an estate in the country; her husband had left them behind him when he passed beyond—as he expressed it—being a spiritualist. His youthful widow, through personal experience, connected business in the city with prosperity and decorum. She had felt safe in the arms of this pleasant, vague young man, with the shy daring eyes, all because of that business in the city; also she had felt pleasantly thrilled by something incalculable, erratic, and hungry. She was sensitive to personality, prone to make rapid summaries of analyzed impressions, for some day she was going to write a novel, "The Hunger of an Unrealized Dream," she had decided. "A dream of childhood persisting through maturity." What was the dream? That was part of the mystery of the man.

The elucidation of the problem necessitated the continuance of the acquaintanceship, since all the dances of that evening did not suffice. One thing was very certain—dancing with her did not appease the hunger or allowing him in the motor just for a moment to hold her hand before she withdrew it, gently and with a motherly admonition. Men had often pretended to have fallen in love with her at first sight, had been singularly unconvincing. This young man pretended nothing, yet suggested—what was it? She had a feeling that to him she was rather a symbol than a reality. Thinking him over she had waited for sleep to come; she had seen him as a wolf hound dumbly begging for the incomprehensible. "Perhaps," she thought, "he was begging her to be more beautiful or differently beautiful." She knew that, though she had a rather perfect figure, her face was—well, there was an elusive attraction—nothing more. They saw a good deal of one another for the rest of that week.

She was rather disappointed when she found that he was a gilded youth who lived in the Albany and flung money about. She had nurtured a romantic hope that he was poor and struggling, perhaps even an adventurer; but as he evidently expected her to be impressed by his wealth she pretended to be impressed and played up to his asserted theory that, though all women cannot be bought by wealth, they can all be thrilled by the sight of it when chucked about. He had explained that he was ceasing to be frivolous at the end of the week. No more dancing, no more restaurants, down to business, the making of a great fortune, power. "But what for?" she had asked. He seemed such an eager child. "The way I can get married," he had answered with great simplicity, using unconsciously an Irish idiom picked up from his nurse. "He'd be frightfully easy to love," thought Vera Toynways; "he'd be almost as good as a baby, a hungry baby." Then she remembered that he was a gilded youth who did something about pipes; she thought of them as the kind which plumbers use and very unromantic for such a romantic looking person.

A YEAR had passed; a very bad year, for the pipe-cleaner business. It was of Vera Toynways that Lance Dermot was thinking as he looked at the five treasury notes which, in accordance with his previous instructions to himself, he had reserved as an emergency ration to be used in some desperate gamble when honest effort no longer held out any promise. That time had arrived. He could no longer maintain himself in the strata of society to which he belonged; therefore he must step down, but before stepping down he was privileged to make one throw with the stake which, out of his war gratuity, his strength of purpose had enabled him to keep intact. As to the stake he, as an adventurer—for thus he now described himself—saw two choices: There was a certain horse, very long odds but known to a very few to have a very good chance, and there was Vera Toynways.

Lance Dermot bit on his pipe resentfully as his mind bracketted the woman he loved with the horse he fancied. He tried to smile cynically and the attempt was a dismal failure. It was not Vera's fault, he reflected, that during the war so much of the world's wealth had passed into the hands of women and clever civilians. It was the misfortune of war. Only for the war he could have supported a wife and wooed her honorably. The hungry look which Vera Toynways had noted looked out of his eyes. He crossed it out; he was an adventurer. His Irish blood steering him towards fatalism, he took half a crown out of his pocket. "Heads the woman, tails the horse," he cried, and planked down the coin on to the treasury notes. It was "heads." The head of Queen Victoria. The horse was beaten. His plan for such a disposal of the five treasury notes had been previously worked out. Two of them for a motor for the evening, two dinners with dance at the Hotel Majestic at 12s 6d each, as advertised. That left thirty-five shillings for champagne and tips.

At the right moment of the gilded evening, probably in the motor on the way home, he would propose. Vera might refuse him; that was quite likely. On the other hand, she might accept him; but when he told her the penniless truth on the following day the cold, unlighted, unmusicked day, she was almost certain to dismiss him with a few cutting words. They would only help to make easier his descent to the lower strata. The remote chance—so remote that it amounted to little more than a miracle in a mirage—was that Vera Toynways might love him, might put love before everything, see only the good in him, believe that the lover was real, the adventurer a fantastic disguise. "Well, anyway," he said to the five treasury notes, "if Vera comes to dinner you'll have given me one night of happiness, something to take to Hell with me."

He rang up Vera Toynways; she answered through the telephone by her bed. "So you've got frivolous again, Capt. Dermot? I am so glad. I suppose that means you have got the silly wealth and power you have been so serious about for a year. . . . Of course I accept with all the enthusiasm which good form permits . . . But why not my motor? . . . O, very well, then—spendthrift! profiteer! whichever you are, only please not so much of the strong, silent man business. Promise that you will be frivolous, as you were during your foolish week . . . You promise . . . Good boy; good-night." To herself she added, as she snuggled into herself, "Wealth and power—— 'The way I could get married' . . . does he? . . . Would I?"

One awful doubt had assailed Lance Dermot as he tubbed on the following morning: Suppose the Restaurant Majestic withdrew that offer of "diner fixée, price 12s 6d. Dancing." The dinner had simply got to the fixée; à la carte was unthinkable. "A dish too much or a price too long and life was never the same again," sang Lance in his bath. When he was dressed he telephoned to the Majestic to reassure himself. Had he gone in person this whole story would have altered itself.

THERE are always a few people hanging around the Restaurant Majestic entrance at dinner time. Shabby, pathetic, romantic souls who feel a second-hand joie de vivre perhaps more poignant and real than that of the exquisite garbed couples who emerge from electric lighted, glass cage motors, like goldfish escaping from bowls, and vanish into the mysterious palace of delight. For the spectators never see the gay, grotesque ghosts which go mincingly behind the gilded couples as they enter, then dance sarabands with them in the ballroom when the dancers think they are only one-stepping. Perhaps it is well that the spectators cannot see the ghosts which go with mincing gait behind the happy couples, for then the show would draw too big an audience and empty every theater in London. If, for instance, the woman who said to her friend as Lance Dermot helped Vera Toynways out of his motor, "I like 'im; 'e's so gay and rich and debbynare," could have seen the ghost of the young man's thoughts she would have glimpsed drama. "Yes," replied her friend, "and she's ser 'appy, oo'd blime 'er with a rich young feller like that with all 'is worldly goods ready to endow 'er." The motor had been paid for in advance; the rest of Lance's worldly goods were shivering in his pocket, wondering whether they would go round.

"I am enjoying this dinner," said Vera Toynways happily, as she consumed the Sole Otero which the maitre d'hotel had suggested. "I have a cook at home with a curse on her. The truth is that one woman always thinks that anything is good enough for another woman to eat. The only way I can get nourished is by having a man to dinner." The explanation that an epicurean uncle was usually the man barely allayed Lance's obvious jealousy. "I have sometimes bucked her up with you, you know." She smiled pretty messages across the table.

"I have arisen calling her blessed," said Lance reminiscently. "As for my hostess—"

"She likes you—I mean the cook—she's Irish, too. She says you are quality. You bring out all that is best in her. I wish you would come often."

"You do?" muttered Lance eagerly, and was about to say something poignant when he remembered his Colonel's advice 'Never to make love to a woman before the entree.'

"You must have won the heart of the head waiter, too. You are the star boarder in this restaurant tonight—Captain Dermot."

"Couldn't—couldn't it be Lance just—just for tonight?"

"Just—just for tonight then—Lance," whispered Vera, yielding up the barricade of names.

"Thank you, Vera!" reciprocated the young man. "I want it to be a perfect night."

"So do I, Lance. "She raised her glass—it was Bollinger. "Here's to the strong silent man; may he never come back. Tonight you are the dear, irresponsible boy of that first night of that first week; please don't make any more money or power again, Lance. Even the head waiter approves of you tonight, or does he know that you are a profiteer disguised as a gilded youth; he has evidently leagued himself with the chef. This sweetbread Toulouse is more like Voisinin's when royalty dines there than a London restaurant."

"They certainly do you well at this chop house. Here's to it." Lance raised his glass. "No, you'll never see the strong silent man again. You'll see—well, never mind what you'll see——"

"Tell me."

"Not now; this is to be a perfect night, you know—like Cinderella's," he added.

"Perhaps the head waiter is a fairy. I say I do feel a kid tonight. It was good of you to invite me, Lance, only seriously I wish you weren't so extravagant."

"Extravagant!" To himself he added, "Fancy Vera calling 12s 6d extravagant.

"Well, you know, they give you quite a good dinner here in the other room for 12s 6d, dance included."

THERE is a merciful provision of nature by which the action of mental shock is delayed, giving time for readjustments. Of course Lance Dermot knew that something had suddenly gone wrong—somewhere—somewhere in the universe, but he did not for a few seconds connect it with himself. In fact, he said——

"The other room—O, yes, the other room," as though it was no concern of his.

"It's where most people go. Quite a good dinner. Not like this of course—but——" The feeling that somewhere in the universe something was wrong suddenly communicated itself to Vera Toynways. Lance Dermot was a thoroughbred and game. At times he had hung on without wincing to the edge of nothing, held on to positions during the war which were all in the air, but they had been impersonal and in the way of business. This—this realisation of personal tragedy which eventually emerged from the chaos of the universe was for himself, and it also dragged the woman he loved in—into a damnable scene. He gulped——

The whole thing had gone smash right in the middle; this Cinderella party was over long long before twelve, nothing remained of it but two more courses and the pumpkin coach. That had been paid for in advance. He looked around the room decorated with unostentatious extravagance. The heavy brocades of the curtains, the jeweled upholactual contemplation. He had never gone to church socials or barn dances, knowing that he would have been unwelcome; and it was at these festivities that boys and girls began to pick and choose. He had been an outsider, living under the sombre aegis of the miser. On the other hand, he could not recall that he had grieved particularly. The village Phebes and Alices, with their incessant giggles and cheap perfumery, had amused him. He had his revenge by comparing them with those radiant creations, urban and bucolic, of the great minds that had been his comrades. He sometimes worried a little for fear that his imagination, setting his dream too high, might allow the real girl to pass him without his being any the wiser.

Supposing he wasn't Silas Bancroft's son? The question, coming like a bolt from the blue, had the effect of bludgeoning his faculties. For a moment he stood dazed. What agency had permitted such a question to disrupt his sentimental musings? Not Silas Bancroft's son? Surely his mind was full of unaccountable kinks this morning.

He heard voices below and lent an ear.

"And nobody ever dreamt of it!"

"No more did I."

"What's he going to do with it?"

"I'm sure I don't know, Mrs. Linden," answered the voice of Mrs. Horne.

So Williams had spread the news as quickly as this? Bancroft shrugged. It had to be known; so it didn't matter. All the girls would be making eyes at him now; and those who had prophesied his eventual hanging would refer to him as "that fine young chap Bancroft. Not a horse trough!

"I suppose he'll go to New York, where he can spend it," said Mrs. Linden, bitterly.

"He will," replied Bancroft, sotto voce; "and this very night!"

"Autymobiles and moving picture actresses, and all that. He ain't so innocent. Or he'll go on gouging folks the way his father did."

"What he does with his money is his own business."

"Did you know that there was a young woman here last night and that he went with her over to the Central?"

"Yes; and I gave the poor young thing a pair of stockings and my best shoes."

"O!" A pause. "What did he leave you?"

"Nothing."

"What—after all your years of faithful service? Well, I never heard of. . . ."

"I was regularly paid. But how did you find out there was millions?"

"Why, he told Williams last night. Seven millions! And the good Lord knows how much blood is on that money. Millions, and he never gave a cent to this town, where both his wife and son were born. He didn't even cancel the mortgage on the First Presbyterian church. O, I know where he is this minute."

"I wouldn't slander the dead, Mrs. Linden. You all ought to be satisfied with the way you treated him when he was alive. There—my coffee's boiling over. I can smell it. You'll have to excuse me."

Silence followed. Bancroft peered from behind his curtain. He saw Mrs. Linden—something of a grenadier—marching stormily down the path to the gate. He blew a mocking kiss after her; for this conversation had suggested a fine idea.

He went into the bathroom and filled the tub, which was of battered zinc, walled in with cherry. He shaved first, then took to the tub, splashing about noisily. Busybody Linden, eh? And she would spread her news that there had been no legacy for Mrs. Horne—Aunty, as he familiarly and lovingly called her. His father's title would now be riven with spikes; eternally he would be in this town the miser.

He was hungry when he entered the dining room. "Chow, Aunty!" he called. "Chow!"

She came in with platters in both hands, one heaped with smoking golden brown pancakes and the other sizzling with bacon and fried eggs. He fell to, healthily. Mrs. Horne hovered about him. He jested with her between bites, but when he had drunk his second cup of coffee his face became serious.

"Aunty, am I really Silas Bancroft's son?"

"What? Land o' Goshen, Jerry boy, whatever put that into your head? What makes you think you mightn't be?" curiously.

"O, I don't know. Popped into my head. It seems to me a real father would have left some advice with all this money, considering that until recently I never saw a hundred dollars in a lump sum."

"Jerry, I was present when your father and mother were married. I was with your mother when you came—and when she died, a week later."

"Maybe he hated me for having caused her death?"

"No. He never spoke a harsh word to you, boy, or ever laid a heavy hand on you. You wasn't ever whipped. But that was because you was a good boy. They went to New York, but came back when she was took ill. This was her house. He went back to New York and left you with me. He got pneumony and was in a hospital for weeks. When he finally came back he told me he was going to live here. But, O, how changed he was!"

"Then he was different once?" eagerly.

"He was something like you, Jerry, energetic. But after he came back he didn't seem to take any interest in anything but money—money. He moved about, like he wasn't sure, and spoke little. But now I know it was his heart. If I was you, Jerry boy, I'd go away from this mean town and never come back. O, I know? They'll be after you, trying to kiss your boots—them as yanked their daughters inside the gates when they saw you and wouldn't let their boys play with you. Yes, sir; that's what I'd do if I was you."

The identical advice offered by the adventurer, but that was all. The two impulses were totally different.

"I am going to New York, aunty, this very night. I'll be gone several months. I want you to keep the house for me. I'll write you from time to time, but nobody must know where I am. You see, that chap last night was the beginning. The door is going to be hammered loose by men and women who'll have schemes—a thousand of them—by which they hope to transfer some of my shekels to other pockets. Tell them I've gone away and will not return under six months."

"Take care o' yourself. New York is a dreadful city—and you like Red Ridinghood!"

"That's pretty good, Aunty. But I'll fight shy of wolves who pretend to be my grandmothers. I shan't go to New York with any illusions about it. I'm not going in search of fortune; I have one. But I've got to leave this town for awhile. So why not to the big city, and get my education over with? I have brains; I want to find out how to use them."

MRS. HORNE retired precipitately to the kitchen to have a good cry. For this boy was as her own. She had taught his prayers. And now his innocence and all this money might combine to destroy him. When she came in to clear the table, she found him still in his chair, figuring on the back of an envelope.

"Why, what's the matter?" he wanted to know, observing the redness of her eyes.

"I'm afraid!"

He jumped up and put his arm around her. "Don't worry about me, Aunty. I'm a country bumpkin, but not the kind New Yorkers ever saw before. My middle name, as the boys used to say at camp, is Caution instead of Jerry; and nobody will know who Jeremiah Collingswood is."

"The money'll never make you happy."

"Perhaps not. I didn't ask for it; but now I have it, I'll do the best I can with it.

The young man called "Shadow."

I'll write once in awhile, and you can reply in care of the attorneys, whose address I will give you before I go."

Then he kissed her cheek.

He stole away at sundown and took the six-thirty for New York. His only piece of luggage was a cane suitcase with a battered lock. In order to keep the case from falling open he had had to bind it with a length of clothes-line. He wore a suit of village store-clothes and a shocking derby hat. It was all deliberately planned. Either his education was lumber, or it was his ready servant. It was to be a test of his courage and resource; a test of the readiness of his tongue to speech. Here on this train and on the streets of the city he would not be particularly noticed; but at the desk of some famous hotel! If he passed this ordeal, if he put through his little comedy, New York would hold no terrors for him.

Once the train had reached its maximum speed, he began to examine the typewritten sheets which enumerated his worldly possessions. There were thousands upon thousands in the banks; there were all manner of gilt-edged bonds and stocks; ships, houses, apartments and tenements. There was here none of those lordly edifices rich men erect as monuments to themselves. All the real-estate, with one exception, lay below Twenty-third street—pick-ups after old families had petered out, gold mines in brick and brownstone.

"Ah!" he said aloud. Here was the item for which he was searching.

The First Presbyterian church, mortgage for $6,200, interest payable annually. What should he do with it? He stared out of the window into the falling night. All at once he began to laugh, a joyous, rollicking laughter. What a revenge!—what a completely satisfying revenge! Very good. He would cancel this mortgage upon one condition, that he should be permitted to furnish at his own expense a memorial window dedicated to his father! If that didn't stir them, Gabriel's trumpet wouldn't! He would submit the proposition in person. He wouldn't miss seeing the vestrymen's faces for half his fortune. O, he knew. They would writhe and twist, hem and haw—and agree. But there should be no loophole. It was to be agreed also that if the window were broken, he could have the right to present another, and so on, so long as he lived and the church stood—the church his father had been married in and buried from.

His laughter roused the young man in the seat behind. The stranger smiled. It was not at any thought, but at a picture: the clothes-line around the suitcase, the cheap, ill-fitting clothes, the derby which recalled the headgear of Joe Weber when old Broadway was somewhere. A boob, pure and simple, heading into the big town, with seven millions in his jeans! The move had been so quick that he hadn't had time to wire the professor. O, well; he would call him up as soon as Mr. Hick tied himself up for the night. He would probably hunt up some two dollar caravansarie. All right. Wherever he went, a certain guy known as The Shadow, would toddle along after. Taxis, surface cars, subways, or on the hoof, it was all the same: The Shadow would never lose sight of The Substance.

BANCROFT became inordinately elated. The possibility of avenging himself, without hurt to any one, was the most satisfying emotion he had yet known. Miser's son! Miser's son! Yah! To avenge himself for that, for the years of callous isolation, and in such a manner as to make all the neighboring towns sick with laughter! The ironic humor of the memorial window would become a county classic.

But he had another blow in store. The memorial would chagrin the villagers, but this second blow would stun them. He had in the home town three friends, no more: Mrs. Horne, Professor Miller, principal of the village academy, and Miss Hewitt, the faded spinster who played the organ in the First Presbyterian church. For several years he had pumped the bellows of that organ; and after rehearsals, Saturday nights, she had used to play for him, compositions not generally heard inside of country churches, filling his boy's soul with celestial happiness. Out of kindness for a forlorn pariah, who was guilty of no crime save that of being the son of Silas Bancroft.

Not in his will, but now! When they were growing old and bent and helpless, when a spell of sickness would rob them of all they had saved up, if they had saved up anything. Now, while they could enjoy it. To make these three happy who had tried to lighten a sensitive boy's misery. Not to add, the enduring happiness of a generous act. Tomorrow, one of the first things he did. It would serve as an eternal buckler against all future misfortunes. Out of these millions, more or less lawfully acquired, should come happiness to three lonely human beings. He would give each a check, certified, for fifty thousand dollars.

The thought lightened his step as he wandered through the mazes of the Grand Central terminal. Outside, at the curb, he paused, his eyes and ears bewildered. It was the first time he had ever seen New York at night, during the theater hour. Thousands of vehicles twisting in and out, surface cars clanging a passage through the streams of hurrying humans, dazzling changing lights. His brain was prepared; he had often visualized New York, London, Paris; but for all that, the actual fairly stunned him; there was a glory to it and a menace.

Here was this world outside he had always longed so keenly to see. Here he would be shunted and buffeted for months, because he had determined to play the part of a poor young man who had come to seek his fortune and become a part of that world Shakespeare called "the middle of humanity." In a few days his brain would absorb all these sights and sort out the confusions, and he would grow used to the city. But just now he was a little afraid. One thing was in his favor, a kind of buckler: he had always been lonely, so loneliness here would not depress him any more than it had at home, if as much.

Across the way was a giant hostelry, brilliant with lamps. Bancroft eyed this with humorous speculation. That vast rookery had many a queer nest in it; there would be the crow, the peacock, the sparrow and the hawk; and somewhere a bird by the name of George Bellman. Supposing he put up there for the night and get the lay of the land? Providing he could pass the censor at the desk. If they balked at his suitcase and his derby there was always

Architectural Beauty

HERE'S a picture of the tower of the Harkness Memorial at Yale. It is a fine architectural achievement. Notice how the continuous vertical lines make the tower seem taller than it really is—the eye leaps from height to height with ever increasing gratification. There is no "visual bump" when you come to the top.

This tower is a gem—it has infinite pictorial possibilities, which means that it makes a fine picture from whatever angle you choose to look at it. That's the big test of a building's beauty. There will be many points from which to view The Tribune's new building, since it will occupy a commanding position on upper Michigan Boulevard. It should, therefore, present a beautiful view from any angle, north, south, east or west.

It must be the concrete architectural expression of a great newspaper, not merely a big office building, from which a newspaper issues every day. It must express the restless energy and surging power characteristic of a great newspaper.

In order that this most beautiful building in the world may be designed and built, the best known architects of the entire world are now in competition for The Tribune's $100,000 prize.

Imagine yourself in the place of the architect chosen to build The Tribune's new home! The Chicago Tribune would say to you: "You are to build the most beautiful building in the world. You can spend all the money you want in order to do it."

How would you feel? Write to The Architectural Editor and tell him what you would do!

AUTUMN MODES FORECAST IN THE C

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—You are probably a serious minded young person of twenty-one or two. Yet, even though you are not a Scott Fitzgerald heroine, maddening vast crowds with your beauty and attentive only to those phenomena of life—dances, amusements, gumdrops, and lovers—which afford your Nietzshian self the highest degree of transient satisfaction—you are normal enough to draw up a little closer when somebody starts to say, "I saw the loveliest new coat today." For here the student of Circe and the student of Cicero meet—on the Bridge of Styles.

This autumn old Dame Fashion is broad minded. Be you girl of 18 or of 58, three distinct silhouettes are offered for your choice. First, there is the side draped mode. Next, there is the full circular or near circular skirt often combined with a tight fitting basque, and last is the hereditary straight line effect jazzed up with a few new touches.

Of all these the side drape is the most insistent. It is specially so in the autumn coat and coat dress. And, although some designers protest against its presence in the clothes of the flapper, the popular model of coat at the left of this page seems to break down the arguments against its essential lack of youthfulness. For, really, you know, the straight line does not confer automatically a degree of youth on its wearer.

This model is in the new Hawaiian blue, which, along with the browns and grays and various tomato reds, is sponsored by the French designers at the expense of black. It is trimmed with beaver and a design of brown ribbon combines with the blue galolith buckle negotiating the side closing to achieve a final richness. Nearly all of these side draped coats have, of course, uneven hem lines and almost without exception they employ buckle or clasp.

If you keep a diary these days you are in for a great deal of repetition. "Saw a black Poiret twill trimmed with red"—this is bound to leap out at you from every page. However, sometimes it is varied to this, "A black wool poplin bound with red." Indeed, poplin goes the weasel of style, and this fabric achieves some of the smartest of the early autumn coat dresses. Let me mention right here that one of these black poplins was bound with nothing less spectacular than flannel.

More conservatively, the model worn by the seated figure on this page is piped in the softest of red silk duvetyne. This also forms the girdle, while the white organdy at the sleeves slashed upward to reveael an extra glimpse of snowy white ruffle. The V neck line is good on today's cloth frock and it is a matter of interest that it is often conjugated with the sailor collar. This old time collar appears, indeed, with striking frequency.

Every college girl needs a crêpe frock for dinner wear and the afternoon reception, and to serve this purpose I am suggesting the one of Lanvin green crêpe second from the left. This reflects our sustained faith with plaits in the plaited side sections arranged to fall over the soft girdle and in sleeves which are plaited from top to cuff. Such plaited sleeves are much to the fore just now, and sometimes they are combined, as here, with the triangular pieces of material falling from the top of the shoulder both front and back and anchored with a metal clasp. Another sleeve which has interested me in the early autumn collections is a perfectly straight, tight fitting affair terminating in a fancy cuff. This has been exploited in the cloth frocks of one of our most prominent New York designers.

The fashionable basic of this autumn is the matelassé. There is positively no end to quilted effects, and some of the Paris coats simulate this weave by an all over stitching of silk. Matelassé is often combined with crêpe, and third from the right we find the combination expressed in a silk and wool fancy weave of good brown allied with French blue crêpe de chine. A loop collar of this latter material fortifies the tight undersleeves and a plaited foundation skirt. The way in which one side panel of the matelassé goes over the girdle and the other under it testifies to the authority still given all manner of independent action in sides. This frock is another suggestion for the necessary dinner or afternoon frock.

For the dance dress of the college girl we submit as first choice the adorably quaint model in the center. Not new in line—no, this offering of a famous 57th street shop—but so striking is the application of an old principle that I was tempted to show it. This frock is a series of ruffles of ecru Valenciennes applied to a foundation of lightweight gold tissue. Much of the ultimate charm relies upon the fact that tiny ruffles constitute the bodice, while wider ones carry out the skirt. An old fashioned nosegay—perforated white paper and all—strikes in its vari colored blooms a gay peal of color.

Newer in line, but less adapted to the youthful figure, is the evening frock at the right. Here again in this model of crushed raspberry velvet with its trimming of either self-colored or cream lace we have the eternal drape of early autumn. Particularly to be noted is the shoulder line. A cluster of crêpe roses substitutes for the girdle. This frock is decidedly too mature for any save the senior, and even she had best leave it to her older sister.

The last model is a charmingly youthful suit combining two shades of gray. Diamond shaped and black stitched pieces of the dark gray skirt fabric are used effectively as pockets beneath a belt of the same dark gray. The flaps coming over the belt are of the light gray. Collar and cuff bands repeat this dark gray with black stitching and gun metal buckles are added here and there. The hat to match forms its brim of diamond shaped pieces of dark gray, each faced with black satin and encircled by a black satin ribbon.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

The point is to wear the cape carelessly. | Red, yellow, and mauve stitching effective on white marocain. | Bloused bodice and flowing sleeves afford an interesting study in line. | Sleeves that resemble a cape more than sleeves.

SMART COMBINATIONS.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS. — (Special Correspondence.) — One watches alertly for preliminary symptoms of the silhouette for fall; also any other indications of fall fashion. One sees repeated appearances of a dress in two colors—in two great blocks of color, one confining itself to the blouse and the other to the skirt. It makes one think of a political map, where one party's states are blocked in black, and one recognizes oneself to be in the presence of a new motif. The skirt is usually blocked in the colors of the minority, while the waist must represent some loyal center, for it is apt to be in spotless white, while the most unwavering of lines, not rippingly like a natural boundary, divide the north from the south.

That so far is our newest offering, and the skirt in this model is likely to be quite tenacious in tendency. In almost all other silhouettes the skirt shoots out into a playful flare.

It is a lot of fun to sit in our courtyard and watch the gesture of Americans newly arrived. The right hand runs rapidly up and down the length of the left arm. It is describing a sleeve. The two hands reinforce each other in the rapid sketch of something on the left hip. Two or three days later a dress appears in person, with crinkly sleeves tightly fitted the length of a long Anglo-Saxon arm and a large bow on the left hip. It is really the two breadths of the skirt tied up into an ornamentation, with an underskirt in a different color screening the vacancy that would otherwise be left when one pre-empted those skirt lengths from their legitimate purpose into one of decoration.

I take it that you get the image. When widths of material intended to screen the lower framework of the femine body are lifted into the purely decorative position of garnishing th left hip, it would leave the silhouette an natural unless stern, swift measures were taken.

The stop gap is likely to be of satin, and will contrast with the dull wool of the model. Still, iced materials are popular for winter, and cloky, which still remains the leading fabric, looks frozen o'er. The effect in material is what you might call cumulative.

Time was when embroidery was deemed the thing, then prints, which are still in at present. Rodier and others began stealing the thunder of the embroideries by doing their designs into the fabrics with the hand looms. Then they began freezing their materials, until now we have iced cloke, embroidered and printed with designs of some of the greatest of all the decorative artists. After this it is sometimes studded with metals, like nails driven in—a softening effect which is produced by all these swarming devices. Still the result is stunning, if not flattering.

Gray and black are considered smart in combinations, and edges are being faced with a darker shade of the material of the dress. Those draped waists, by the way, which are a part of the dresses blocked out in two colors, can only be worn by people with awfully good figures. And as the complement to all of this iced, hard material one of the favorites for all is something that takes the place of the agnella of last year. It is plush with a long nap that is twisted like astrakhan and has depths to it which are extremely soft.

Meantime the accompanying sketches show what is doing in the world of fashion, with particular attention on the silhouette. In Deauville the first cape—or the movement of it—was started by Paul Poiret, and its ancestors had the long, boat shaped line lying along the shoulders, with the long slit stationary down the length of the left arm.

In the one here presented the opening may be moved from center or over the other arm in case it should feel the need of ventilation, at will. The only point is to wear the cape carelessly. Its band of coarse lace will make it effective anywhere, and in the present instance it is especially so. The dull black of the crepe shows smartly against the white crepe de chine of the dress. And this gown, by the way, still keeps the low waist line, with the little fan shaped plaits across it, in a movement which promises to grow in popularity with fall. The hat is of soft black straw, with silver fruits and flowers crushed against its crown.

The second silhouette is extremely effective in its straightness. The material is white crepe marocain, with red, yellow, and mauve stitching. A double pearl pin holds the belt in place low on the left side. The hat is of Chinese green in felt, and it has a ribbon corcarde in this color over the left ear. Over the whole creation is thrown a brown veil. The parasol is Chinese in shape, and the white foundation of it is run with rows of green printed in. The girl who wears this costume is awfully good looking, with fair skin and golden hairs.

The third offering affords a charming contribution in line and coloring. The sleeves fall in lovely, long folds. Its bodice blouses sighty and its ceinture is wide. At the throat the low cut bodice is held in place with three buttons. And with it this charming young exponent of the fashion wears long maroon gloves of suede and a bangkok hat with the same soft shade of brown draped round the crown with a bit of velvet.

The last silhouette owes its effectiveness to the use of blue stripes on a white georgette foundation. The gown itself has a V neck and a low belt that ties round in a narrow band. The hat is of white straw with a supple brim that has a big swing to it—as one says professionally—due to the fact that a bunch of white coque feathers done in a cluster as if to represent a peony weighs it heavily on one side, and sends ends like streamers across the front of it and beyond the brim's edge with lots of dash.

But the sleeves are the feature. You notice how they are made almost to represent a cape. And that's the trick now in costuming—to make sleeves, neck trimmings, anything about you, look like a cape, but to prevent it from being one. For the cape as such is all but morte.

NEEDLE WORKED LACE.

HERE is a lovely needle worked lace which is quickly done.

To commence work, hold the end of the thread down on the material, insert the needle in material, pointing away from you and under the thread, take thread nearest eye of the needle, and place under and over needle, pull through and tighten knot as shown in upper left hand corner. Insert needle in material about a quarter of an inch from the last stitch, having thread nearest the work over the needle, take thread nearest eye of the needle, place under and over needle, pull through and tighten thread. This forms the Armenian loop. Continue for desired length taking great care to keep loops even. All succeeding rows of loops are worked in the loops of previous row.

Scallop (same illustration). Work 2 loops, turn, knot in the first loop, work 2 loops, turn, knot in the first loop, work one loop, knot in the same loop, knot in the loop at beginning of scallop and continuing working, leaving as many loops between scallops as desired.

Straight bar—(Upper right hand illustration). Knot in the first loop, knot in the next loop, leaving a ⅝ inch loop, knot in top of ⅝ inch loop, knot in the next loop, leaving the same length loop, knot in the top of loop, leaving a quarter inch thread between knots, repeat from * for desired length.

Crossed bar—(Lower right hand illustration). Knot in first loop, knot in the next loop leaving a ⅝ inch thread, knot top of loop, knot in next small loop leaving the same length loop, place needle under the last three bars with thread nearest work over the needle, place thread nearest eye of the needle under and over the needle and tighten knot, knot in top of loop and repeat for desired length.

OUT OF THE PAST.

IT would seem that in our town there was no romance, for it is an old, old town in the north woods of Wisconsin. On the one side rises a high hill and on the other there are tamarack forests that supply the paper mills. People are matter of fact, practical.

In February, 1920, came a girl to act as city welfare worker and she was immediately popular with her associates. Where she hailed from we must ascertain; that is the way of the woods.

She was lonely. On Sundays she tramped out to the hill, or else she in her room and with eyes on a book thought of her dear old home; of the father and mother, now dead; the brothers, married. But she was brave and worked on desperately.

And then one Sunday when the gossamer web of October enfolded northern Wisconsin and she fared forth in hiking clothes to climb the hill, she ran into a man talking to his stalled car. She offered her aid. He accepted. Began a strange courtship. He was a lumber king, 55, unmarried, and she wondered at the women of the entire world for not attaching him.

Roberta was not a raving beauty, neither was she ugly. She was not a model for the latest clothes. Still she was the lumberman's ideal. He told her so; told her she was the most wonderful girl he knew; that she was a good pal; and then, because he invariably closed his lumber deals directly, he told her he was going to marry her on Thanksgiving day. And he did.

They traveled about; came back to us, where she became active in community work.

In August, 1921, she had the Girl Scouts out on a hike. They struck camp, lunched, and decided to swim across the river. She was a good swimmer. In midstream she came close to a boat in which were two men.

"Hello, Bobby!" greeted one.

She went down, came up, went down. The girls were alarmed and swam toward the spot where she had disappeared. The man who had addressed her was now in the water. Repeatedly he dived for her. None saw her after that. A searching party soon assembled. In two hours they brought her body back to shore.

The man who had tried to rescue her said she was his wife. The lumberman would not listen to him and buried her with due honor. The other was insistent. In a little battered trunk they found the marriage certificate. It was dated nine years previous. But the lumberman was her husband lover. He spoke no word even to his own father of her first affair. Towering high above all the monuments in the cemetery is her tombstone.

And the lumberman has enshrined in his memory his wonder woman, his wife, whom he thinks of with loving charity, for he is old fashioned enough to believe God gave her to him and God took her away.

KNIGHTHOOD IN FLOWER.

WHEN I was a little girl I regarded boys as the world's greatest nuisances, inasmuch as I had two brothers who spent more of their time teasing me, as did their friends. I remember agreeing heartily with a teacher who, exasperated with the misbehavior of several masculine pupils, remarked one day that "Only God and mothers could understand small boys."

Therefore it was at a much later age than most girls that I experienced that first love affair, and it came in this wise:

There appeared one morning in my class at school a boy aged 15 who, wonder of wonders, had well brushed hair and well brushed shoes. The young men of my acquaintance scorned all such. Ross was his name, and Ross was the sole topic of conversation among the girls for some time to come. To my great delight and surprise, he lavished his courtly charm upon me. He carried my books; he swept off his cap, instead of touching his finger to the peak; he liked the same books I did. But there was more to come.

Gibes about "Ross' girl" became the mode, which Ross resented, not for his sake but for mine. He knew how I disliked teasing. So one day when Bobby Lane, the strong man of the class, went a bit too far, off came Ross' coat and the fight was on. Never did fair lady look on with greater pride than I, for the outcome of the fray was only too apparent from the first. Bobby retired from the scene a vanquished foe, and from that day we were teased no more.

Ross and I went through high school together and kept up diligent correspondence during college days. We've been married ten years now, and we've two small boys whom I regard as the world's greatest treasures.

Earrings and the Woman

by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, pulp skin, blackheads, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—At last we have the answer as to the why of an ear from a strictly ornamental point of view. A straight beauty feature it could not be called, except in rare cases. Women, sensing this fully, have shown the discretion long associated with wisdom, and kept them earmuffed and forebanged, so that their shell-like properties have given them little or no concern.

Now cometh the earring craze. And if one may judge from the rapid contagion of the fad, before the season is out a pair of ears from which suspends no coral rosebud, carved jade, or filagreed metal of antique design is going to blush for seeming nudity. This fashion, as old as the ages, is revived in all its barbaric glory.

To be picturesque above everything else is the aim of today's beauty. The present day fashion in smart dressing is not the straight and sports type of frock, but the appealing long graceful line, soft materialed with picturesque trimming. Historically correct, then, is the complementary picturesque earring. Altogether an exquisite relief from the militant maid of another day not so far removed.

Observing the ultra modern beauty from the crossroads of wealth and its imitators, the earring is no longer an article of jewelry, but an article of dress to conform to the other articles of dress, making a grand total of personality, for into the bobbing trinkets may be chosen a distinct and extremely interesting personality.

Their becoming quality is no negligible quantity. There is a subtle something about the modern fashion which requires the ear to be pressed into service as the means to an end of this added ornamentation.

But to acquire this appealing, picturesque, drooping, and alluring effect, the earrings cannot be chosen willy-nilly. No, rumor hath it that in some cases the earrings are the pivot upon which swings the design of the gown, the coiffure, and the chapeau. One pair of earrings may not be allotted to any old gown or frock hanging in the closet. They are too much the center of attraction for that.

They cannot be worn with sports clothes without looking quite ridiculous. Add them to your long lined, low waisted, long skirted crepe frock and if smartly chosen, you acquire that individual touch which raises you out of the ranks of the commonplace.

Earrings will emphasize a type distinctly your own, providing you exercise as much individuality in their choice as you have in building up the characteristics which make of you a woman apart.

There are laws of design which must be conformed to in relation to the shape of the face, however. Some women are born with an inherent knowledge of these fundamentals. Others are not. Thus are born tragedies in the way of decorating ears with the wrong ornaments and faces with earring designs that are all out of proportion.

The long, slender, face, say, with round and looped earrings would be saved a sharpening of the contour which the opposite character of earrings would provoke.

The round, full face, on the other hand, would present a more pleasing contour with the dangling, long ornamentations. Especially if the neck is slender these earrings meet with utmost success.

For the piquant face, small in all its proportions, the earring fitted close is likely to be most fetching. In the concentrated space she may have quite a varied arrangement of color and stone.

When worn with hats, again line may be considered to the greater glory of the face. Some of the long and drooping varieties of earrings will make the large hat a thing of beauty and distinctiveness. For the turban the close fitting earring would follow better the laws of design.

Because of the prevalence of the earring the coiffure threatens an extreme simplicity. As the winter season comes on with its more formal dress and more elaborate ear decoration, it is predicted that the extremely simple coiffure and correspondingly simple draping of the frock, will be the distinctive fashion note. And as a consequence the ears will protrude somewhat upon the horizon because the tip of the ear, at least, must be shown to produce the most fascinating effect.

The most popular type of earrings so far seems to be the tasseled, drooping ones. Manifold are the designs of these.

The colors are brilliant and beautiful, and with a costume of neutral color may provide that smart dash, the meaning of which we women understand if the other halves don't. But here a word of caution. The brilliant colors may swing cruelly against a complexion which has lost its youthful bloom or exaggerate the faded tone of the eye grown a bit dull and weary keeping up with the procession. There are minor chords, not sad ones, by a long odds, for such to suspend from ear lobes.

Jade, which is perhaps more universally becoming than any other single color, has a tremendous following. Coral for the brunette is shown in the most lovely workmanship. Carved white jade, somewhat of a luxury, is becoming to almost every type of woman. Carved and filigreed metal designs, some fantastic, some simple, and some medium, are there on the tray to lure us on to hope or destruction, however our choice strikes its associate face. Jet and crystal, emeralds and pearls hold forth temptation for those with the precious stone pocketbooks, designs so lovely that but to look upon and admire were joy enough.

Is Marriage a Failure?

Why do so many marriages go wrong? What are the underlying causes of happy marriages? Are there any happy marriages? What is the matter, if anything, with marriage, the institution?

W. L. George, the English novelist, investigated 1,557 marriages. One hundred and sixteen cases he eliminated as unsuccessful; in five cases the husband was unfaithful; in ten it was the wife; the husband disliked the wife in three cases and in seven it was the wife who did the disliking. Only nine marriages, Mr. George says, were "apparently successful."

"Marriage," he adds, "is on its trial before a hesitating jury."

Look over the marriages you know yourself. How many are successes; how many are failures? And why?

The Tribune will pay $1 for each letter published on the question, Marriage—what do you think of it? Address Marriage Editor, The Sunday Tribune.

They Know All About It.

"Everybody is jolly tonight," Bill remarked as we sat down to dinner. "The married ones must have stayed at home."

Bill and I are bachelors, and during the intervals between ordering and eating we have a look around the café and speculate as to who is married and who is not. In fact, after a little practice we don't speculate—we know.

We know that the portly, prosperous couple who sit near the archway and scarcely look out from behind their sporting page and society section are married. We know that the bored woman whose eyes narrow as she gazes out the window and the cynical man who studies the wall paintings are married. We know that the harmless couple at our left who obviously like each other well enough but can't think of anything to say are married.

We know also that the brown eyed girl and the young chap with the pompadour, who lean across the table and whisper and sigh and smile and forget to eat their salad are engaged.

And we know that the pair in the corner where the ripples of laughter hail from, where talk is lively, eyes are flashing, cheeks rosy, soon will be engaged.

In a word, where everything is merry and gay, wedding rings do not predominate. If the married ones aren't actually bored and grouchy they are too lazy to invent conversation.

One couple we liked to watch. They came only on Saturday nights, and there was never any yawning at that table. When the girl wasn't telling some thrilling story she was listening with rapt attention to her companion, and when it was her turn to talk the man looked at her with his soul in his eyes.

"Engaged!" we diagnosed it.

On this particular evening our friend Jim dined with us. "Well," he said in reply to Bill's opening remark, "There are the Munsons. They're married," and he bowed to our favorite couple!

"Where is her ring?" we objected.

"Had it filed off," Jim explained. "Nelle's getting plump."

"But they seem so happy," we persisted.

"Sure!" Jim agreed. "They're busy and in love, and every Saturday night they leave the baby with his grandmother and come downtown to celebrate.

When Jim introduced us he added: "A couple of bachelors, these. What do you suppose they thought about you?" And he told them.

"Dick and I do that, too," Mrs. Munson confessed. "We figured that you," she smiled at Bill, "were a widower. He looks so—so kind of paternal, you know," she smiled at me.

"And what did you think about me?" I demanded.

"You won't be offended?"

"Not a bit."

"Well I really don't know what our reasons were," she faltered. "But we—we decided you were getting a divorce from your wife."

VARIED ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN

Approximately 14 per cent of the postoffices in the United States are presided over by women.

Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and the Netherlands show decreases in the number of surplus women.

Mrs. Anna M. Prater of Los Angeles, Cal., who recently celebrated her one hundred and eighteenth birthday, has outlived all her children from several marriages.

Miss F. Eulalie Herkin of Lockport, Canada, who recently passed the final examinations of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Canada, is the first woman in the dominion to accomplish it.

Miss Margaret L. Davis guides one-tenth of the English population in the consumers' drive for better food prices in that country. She is head of the co-operative congress, which has nearly 5,000,000 members.

My Vacation Adventures

What was the most thrilling moment in your vacation? Was it on a boat or motor ride on a lovely night with the only one? Was it at a dance? Was it a kiss in the moonlight? Or was it a tug at the hook by a big fish? Or a close call when your canoe upset? Write your most thrilling experience and send it to Vacation Editor, The Sunday Tribune. One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

The Woman Above.

My vacation thrill was big enough to last me for many vacations to come. I spent a month in a seaport town on the Atlantic coast. Late one Saturday night I received a telegram that called me out of town. There were no late trains, and I was compelled to take the 11 o'clock boat, which on that night was an excursion boat.

I had no reservation, and was given the choice of sitting up all night or sharing a stateroom. I chose the latter. My traveling companion was asleep in the upper berth when I entered the stateroom, consequently I did not see her, but her baggage looked promising and I went to sleep with little or no uneasiness.

Toward morning a sudden lurching of the ship awakened me. The woman in the upper berth was also awake. I could hear her softly clapping her hands together, moaning and muttering incoherently. Gradually the muttering became more distinct. She was begging and imploring not to be taken to the asylum; over and over she pleaded her sanity. As I lay there, numb with fear, my heart almost stopped. She was coming down. By some superhuman force I managed to keep my eyes closed and pretended I was asleep. I could feel her standing beside me.

Presently she bent over me, arranged the covers about my shoulders, and whispered softly, "Oh, Florence, I didn't know you were with me. Now I am safe."

Then she climbed back up into her own berth, and by the time my taut nerves had relaxed she was sleeping again, breathing heavily.

I lost no time in getting out of the stateroom and refused to go back even for my bag. T. C.

In the Nick of Time.

We were on our way home after a trip on the lake. It was late and we were in a hurry, so cut across the dried up swamp to save time. It had rained recently, but I thought not enough to make any difference. My son walked lightly in his bare feet, but I didn't get off so easily. I am quite heavy and I wore high heeled shoes that day. Just as I reached the middle of the swamp I began to sink. Deeper and deeper I went. I became panicky. I screamed aloud to my son and wondered as I went further and further in how long it would take for the slimy stuff to come up to my chin and how I would feel as it began to choke me.

A farmer from the adjoining field who had seen me waving frantically rushed over and with the assistance of my son managed to extricate me.

To the mystic life-long tie woven at the altar by book and oath, this ARBUTUS BLOSSOM WREATH WEDDING RING adds the strengthening link of flower language. Five tender words translate its meaning. They Only Do I Love. It was the wedding flower of the Puritans.

Ask to see this delicate design at your local jewelry store. Be sure the stamp is on the ring. A wedding ring so stamped is of good fortune since Pharaoh's time. Send for booklet, "How A Wedding Ring Is Made." A wedding ring so stamped, plain or carved, is your guarantee of correctness in quality, workmanship and style.

FOR HOT, HUMID DAYS

For the hot, humid days that make your feet swell and burn, Cantilever Shoes are a welcome relief.

Cantilever Shoes are patterned from the natural outline of the foot. The result is such absolute comfort that you are never conscious that Cantilever Shoes touch the foot at any point.

There is ample toe room. The inner sole line, which follows the line of the foot, allows the toes to point straight ahead in their natural position. The heel of Cantilever shoes is slightly tilted; it tends to distribute the weight evenly.

The flexible shank is drawn up when the shoe is laced, so that it meets and supports the arch of the foot at every point. The flexibility of the shank allows the muscles to exercise freely, which strengthens the arch muscles and prevents fallen arches.

All guesswork eliminated; every shoe is now fitted by X-Ray without extra charge to you.

Genuine Cantilever Shoes have the name "CANTILEVER" stamped on the shank. Avoid substitutes.

RECOMMENDED FOR PERFECT HEALTH AND COMFORT

The Y. W. C. A., in the interests of its thousands of members, made a study of footwear; as a result, they recommend for perfect health and comfort a shoe with the following qualifications:

(1) A broad, low heel; (2) a straight inner sole line; (3) easy toe room; (4) a flexible shank.

The Cantilever number 57 last, illustrated above, fulfills all these requirements. It is prescribed by physicians and foot specialists to relieve fallen arches, weak ankles, aching back, and many ills which result from poor carriage and wrong footwear.

The Cantilever Shoe has a flexible shank that gives with the action of walking, allowing the muscles to move with ease and freedom. Ordinary shoes, and metal appliances, bind the foot and restrict its movement. But in Cantilever Shoes the muscles exercise and grow strong. In this comfortable and natural way, Cantilever Shoes prevent and correct fallen arches.

The natural inner sole line allows the toes to point straight ahead in their normal position. The weight is distributed without strain. Pulling the laces draws up the under-arch sole to support the instep. There is provision made for every detail of health and comfort in Cantilever Shoes. Try a pair this week.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

TWO materials will make up attractively by pattern No. 1075. Satin for the skirt and a gayly figured crêpe or georgette for the waist would look well, or perhaps the same materials in contrasting colors. The skirt is straight and in one piece, and measures at the bottom for size 36 one and three-eighths yards. The waist is cut with shoulder and under arm seams, and has set in sleeves. There is a long rolled collar and small vest, and narrow straps are set on at each under arm seam for the sash.

If the dress were made of a thin material it would be pretty to put skirt and waist together with a lace insertion. The edge of the skirt should be rolled and gathered and overhanded to the lace, and the lower edge of the waist finished with a one-eighth inch hem—the edge overhanded to the insertion. A narrow, matching edge could finish the sleeve edges and the collar, and the vest be made of alternating rows of narrow, matching insertion and wider rows of strips of the waist material. These strips are straight and hemmed on both edges—using the narrowest hemmer on the machine—and are usually half again as wide as the insertion.

All the seams should be French and not too narrow. Before basting the collar to the dress pin it to the neck of the waist in the back, exactly matching the middle of the waist and the collar, and then pin it to the waist at the ends. Hold the neck of the waist next to you while basting and stitching. Clip the seam and both edges of the collar at rather close intervals from end to end, and then, laying the seam back towards the collar, turn in the other edge of the collar, and hem down over the seam.

Pattern No. 1442 is a good design for a dressy frock for a young girl. Taffeta or one of the soft crêpes would be lovely. There is a one piece, straight gathered skirt, opening on the left side. A deep hem should be allowed for in the cutting and this should be hemmed by hand, trying to have the sewing show on the right side as little as possible.

The waist closes in the front, and covering this opening is a prettily shaped bib that meets the ends of the round collar. This bib section extends to the under arm seams, where it is joined to sash ends that tie in the middle of the back. A narrow piping of a contrasting color could outline the edges of the bib—top, bottom, and sides—and the collar and sleeves could have the same finish. If one desired, the front of the waist, or rather the bib, could have some embroidery on it.

Pattern No. 1456 shows the fashionable loose panel that one sees today on most of the dressy frocks. But this differs from the usual designs, as there is a panel on one side only. As you know, there are usually two—one on each side.

The dress is long waisted, and skirt and panel are joined to the waist at the low line. The skirt is in one piece, gathered to the edge of the waist, and for size 36 measures about 1½ yards around the lower edge. One or two materials may be used in the making, and the panel and front of the waist would look well with bead or laid embroidery.

The waist has a short opening in front, but the closing is on the left shoulder, so that the collar will have to be set into a narrow band from the shoulder opening to the end of the collar on that side. Of course the neck on the left side will have to be faced for the same distance and the collar fastened to the dress with tiny snaps.

Our terraced lawn is a source of delight to the children of the neighborhood, because it offers a hill for sliding and rolling. To keep the lawn from being skinned, we have had to be severe with some of the youngsters who habitually come there to play. Mary, a little neighbor, has constituted herself as watchman, and duly reports the misdemeanors of everybody excepting herself. One day I heard quite an argument out in front. Mary was ordering some little folks away.

"But you slide there," said Bobby.

"What if I do?" said Mary. "Me and Lucy can slide all we want to, just because we is us." M. K. P.

Ruth asked for a doll for her third birthday, "as big as me." We got her one about 12 inches high and presented it to her at the breakfast table, wrapped in a box.

She looked at us, then at the box, at us again, and quietly finished her breakfast.

Being asked why she did not open the box to see her new doll, she answered, "O, me wants to surprise me longer." W. R.

Melba likes to visit her grandmother, whom she adores. Her two gifted aunties were at home during the child's last visit; one is a noted lecturer, the other a celebrated singer. They made much of Melba, who admired them immensely but remained loyal to grandma, following her about continually.

"What are you going to be when you grow up, Melba?" asked Aunt Millie.

"A grandma," promptly replied the child. G. E. H.

"David, why don't you eat your fish like your brother does? Fish is brain food."

"Yes, fishes have brains," said Brother Ed.

David replied: "No, I don't think fishes have brains when they hang on the hook and get caught." E. A. A.

Chester did not enjoy his visit to his aunty who lived in a flat, and when he came home he voiced his grievance to his father, saying: "There wasn't no room to move around in. Why they didn't even have any kids in that building to fight with." J. M. C.

Edward was fond of his uncle and ran to meet him every time he came to see him; but one day uncle came minus his mustache.

Edward ran to meet him as usual, but when he discovered the change he turned and ran into the house much excited. "Mother—come quick—the look that Uncle Bob had is gone." L. U.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

By Jane Eddington.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

ONE of the latest lists of the farmers' bulletins—for free distribution—has at its head the following: "Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables. Pp. 50, Fig. 15. contribution from the office of home economics, states relation service. Revised, June, 1922 (Farmers' Bulletin 1211)."

Note that you have here for the asking fifty pages of the most reliably prepared directions for home canning. These bulletins have been read, corrected, read over again, revised, and it is reasonable to believe there is not an error of any slightest importance in them. Here is every exact bit of information you need, and it is rather foolish to try to duplicate any part of this in a column like my own which is always subject to abbreviation in the make-up and which is prepared by one who cannot spend months on end just canning and putting down in the most careful ways all the points.

Learn the System.

The best is none too good for us in doing any work with food, and it is vitally necessary to follow most minutely the most careful directions in all canning work. A real system has been worked out. You must learn the system; then you can take the directions for one product and by following those plus the general directions you ought to succeed, especially if you have any ability to see your own shortcomings.

There are enormous losses of canned goods because every care is not taken to buy the best rubber rings and to test them and because cans and covers are not tested and then because thorough sterilizing is not done. The more I have watched all this the more cowardly I become about giving directions for fear I shall leave out some vital point, and for fear I shall be held responsible for losses which come from incomplete work. A poor housekeeper can learn to can by watching an expert, and then do the work perfectly, but she can never learn from directions.

Hygiene in the Kitchen.

Many housekeepers think they are sanitary in their housekeeping when they are not. Many housekeepers think they are hygienic in all ways when they are far from it, and you cannot tell them nor even hint to them how decadent they are, especially if they pose as authorities and write books telling others how to do.

Farmers' bulletin 839 is the good old war horse bulletin on canning that helped us win the war. It is just as good as it was, and it has nearly forty pages of text. It has good pictures.

The different state bulletins on the one period cold pack canning are good, and always the yearly reports from those who are doing the work bring some new suggestion. I have not compared bulletins 839 and 1211, but naturally the later work is the one we think likely to bring us the best information.

Cold Pack More Wholesome.

In spite of bulletins and books on the newer methods there are many housekeepers who will cling to certain old fashioned preserves and canned or candied fruits and will hand these recipes on. There are exceedingly valuable recipes in books, too, but in the embarrassment of riches we do not know which way to turn if we have not had experience with them.

The people who developed the one period cold pack method did not invent it. Perhaps it originated among the Pennsylvania Dutch. I think so, but I may be mistaken in this. At any rate, it is a thriftier and more wholesome way than putting up fruit in dense sirups. Because of the amount of sugar used these old-fashioned preserves were kept in cool places without being perfectly sterile, but they sometimes did collect mold if the storage place was not dry and clean as well as cool. A cap of mold was even thought to be a protection, and it was removed and the preserves put on the table. Such economies have their risks, and they do not promote nice eating which promotes the best health.

Canned Peaches.

This recipe came from a Pennsylvania Dutch source. Note: It takes but three pounds of sugar with three quarts of water to put up a whole bushel of peaches well packed in the can. The sugar is well dissolved in the water—one pound of sugar to one quart of water is the general proportion—and the two cooked together for fifteen minutes to get a thin sirup.

In cold pack canning by the new method we lower the can, which has in it hot sirup or hot water to make the operation safe, into boiling water. There is rarely an accident but in this old recipe the jars are started in cold water and heated slowly.

Wash peaches or rub them with a clean cloth; drop them into boiling water; drain, peel, and cut in half to take out pits. A few pits left in give a certain good flavor. Pack closely in sterile jars, fill up jars with sirup, put on rubbers and caps, turning the latter till they catch, and put on a rack in the canner. We now have individual racks for each can which can be used. These keep the cans from touching and are far better than to keep them apart with paper as by the old method. Fill the canner with cold water until it comes up around the necks of the cans, heat slowly, and after the water once comes to the boiling point let it boil for ten minutes. Then take out cans; screw them up tight. The old fashioned way was to turn them upside down to cool.

Other fruits may be put up in the same way, but study the time tables for fruits in the cold pack manual and you will see how much longer the fruit must be on the stove than in the modern way. However, if you have nothing but a new wash boiler and a wooden rack, you can do quantity work in this esy. This outfit is a good one in which to sterilize a quantity of cans, and as you have no fear from tepid temperatures in this way of doing it has its advantages for quantity work.

Peach Leather.

When it was done in a lovely clean way, peach leather was a pleasant dainty and could be soaked up like dried apple. The peach pulp was spread half an inch thick on clean boards or plates and dried. The pulp was also cooked, then heavily sugared and dried.

Ginger Pear.

The following is the sure enough popular old recipe for ginger pear. I have seen endless variations of this recipe, but I have always believed that the old lady (of family) who gave it to me knew what she was saying when she said it was the original patroon recipe, the home of which was near Albany, N. Y.

Eight pounds of cooking pears, eight pounds of sugar, two ounces of green ginger, the juice and rinds of six lemons, one measuring cup of water (she said tumbler, but the average tumbler holds a measuring cup of water). Peel the ginger root, cut it in small pieces, and leave it in the water while preparing the pears. Peel and chop the pears fine, cut the lemon rinds fine, add the sugar, water and ginger, and cook until clear.

It is easier to keep this clear and light of shade if it is cooked in about four portions and gently. It can easily be cooked dark like the unhandsome marmalades, for it is a marmalade really. Cook slowly and at as low a temperature as possible. The lemon juice and rind give it jellying quality, and it is best put up in glasses.

When You Were a Girl Did Mother Dye This Way?

NO! If she wanted to dye a piece of goods it had to be ripped up, a dye solution mixed and the goods boiled and boiled in it. It was a job—flakes scattered over the house and utensils were ruined. But RIT has changed all of this. Now you take a garment just as it is and wash it in RIT suds—exactly as any garment is washed. You clean it and dye it in one simple operation—and RIT works equally well on silk, cotton, wool or mixed fabrics. Select any of the 31 colors and use RIT regularly. A few of the heavier dark colors require boiling.

THE POTTERS

Blue Ribbon Comics

by J. P. McEvoy

Prologue.

It is a gay and festive bunch that clambers on board the good ship Mal de Mer this evening for the night ride up north. The shore is lined with happy friends and relatives, happy to be rid of each other for a short while . . . among the gayest of the gay are the Potters, Pa, Ma, Bill, and Mamie, and gayer than even the gayest is Grandma, who is taking her first trip on the water this evening . . . but even in her gayest moments she has not forgotten all the catastrophes caused by passengers crowding to the rail near the shore, so while the Potters are busy waving Grandma is scurrying around to the other side to help ballast the boat . . . the captain will be grateful, if he ever finds it out.

Scene I.—They're Off.

And now with a great clanking of chains and puffing of tugs the boat eases out into the river . . . looks just as though the shore was moving back and the boat was standing still . . . everybody agrees, so it must be so . . . everybody also agrees to sit up real late and enjoy every minute of the trip . . . it's a beautiful thought, if they can only hold it.

Among the gayest of the gay are the Potters.

MA (to Grandma):
I'm sure we'll have a wonderful trip,
This certainly is a beautiful ship.

PA (smoking enormous black cigar):
Well, I'm all set now . . . let 'er blow;
If she gets rough I'll go below.

(He read that somewhere . . . he'll be calling it downstairs before long.)

GRANDMA (observing the lighted windows in the city sky line):
Don't city people ever stop? Here it's night and they're still working.

PA:
Those are offices being cleaned, or maybe there's some poker games going on up there.

MA:
That's the work that keeps you down late at the office, is it?

(Such a question really doesn't call for an answer.)

BLANCHE (to Nell, nearby—we'll hear from both of these dear creatures again):
Let's look up the purser. He's a Northwestern boy. You know him, too.

NELL (coily):
Maybe we can get him to show us the wireless room. Won't that be thrilling?

(Thrilling hardly describes it . . . maybe he'll buy them a soda . . . that will be thrilling, too, not so much now as a little later when the waves begin to kick up . . . nothing like a chocolate soda in your system on such a solemn occasion, unless it is stewed tomatoes and nut cake, on which the Potters dined heartily before coming aboard.)

Scene II.—She Starts, She Moves.

And now the good ship Mal de Mer, which has been spraddling up and over the waves in a rather easygoing fashion, begins to get down to business . . . the steady throb of the engines, which no one noticed before except in a gay mood, begins to pall on even the gayest . . . every few minutes a white, anxious face rises hurriedly from a deck chair and disappears through the gloom on a pair of legs that wabble fantastically.

PA (he thought nobody was watching, so he has sneaked up to the Lookout to get some confidential information on the weather):
I think we're gonna be all right?
Looks to me like a storm tonight.

LOOKOUT (lying like a sailor and a gentleman):
Storm? O, no, just a little swell.
Don't you worry; all is well.

(Boat begins climbing up and down waves like a moutain goat . . . doesn't seem so swell to Pa.)

MA (to Grandma):
I'm beginning to feel a little queer.
It must be the engines in my ear.

GRANDMA (gaily):
Probably a little uneasy in your stomach.
You'll get rid of it.
(What a prophetic soul!)

MAMIE (half to herself and half to the world):
I wish I hadn't eaten those stewed tomatoes.

MA (overhearing her and turning paler):
I wish you'd keep still about what you ate.

(Army of huge white capped waves marches rapidly in from horizon, boat begins to swoop up and down, dizzily . . . with the first real swoop the perspiration breaks out on Ma's forehead, also Mamie's . . . Pa announces his intention of turning in . . . feels sorter sleepy, he says . . . yes, he does!)

Boat begins to swoop up and down dizzily.

MAMIE (starting to her feet):
Everything's rocking . . . oooh! . . . why didn't I leave those stewed tomatoes alone?

MA (clinging to rail on her way below):
I'm gonna bed . . . if I live to get there.

BILL (loudly and heartlessly):
I'm feeling kinda hungry. I wonder if I could get a nice plate of bacon and eggs.

(As if the word bacon was a signal, there is a mad rush for the rail . . . Grandma alone seems unaffected . . . wonders artlessly what all the shootin's for . . . never felt better in her life . . . announces her intention of sitting up and watching the moonlight a while . . . well, she can sit so far as Ma and Mamie are concerned . . . they don't care if they ever see another moon . . . all they want is a corner where they can lie down and let the rest of the world go by.)

Scene III.—God Pity the Poor Sailors on a Night Like This.

(Imagine if you can a room slightly smaller than a telephone booth with an upper and lower berth on one side, a wash stand and medicine cabinet on the other side, a window that looks out on the cruel and crawling foam, and a little stool that responds delicately to every motion of the boat and is all over the place all the time . . . that's the stateroom in which Ma and Mamie and Grandma may now be seen, while next door to them, not knowing it at the time, are Pa and Bill . . . Blanche and Nell, who found their purser friend and got a chocolate soda apiece, are in the adjoining room . . . this is going to be a jolly party.)

VOICES FROM MA'S ROOM:
Oooh! . . . . ohhhh! . . . I'll never get undressed, I know. (A series of convulsive sounds easier imagined than described.) Ooooh!

BILL (not knowing who they are):
Those women in there make me tired.

PA (hollowly):
They're making me worse than tired. They're making me sick.

BILL (with false gayety):
Buck up, Pop. They say you're all over it in a week.

VOICES OUTSIDE THE WINDOW (they're always out there, every trip):
An' I says to him . . . says she . . . an' he says to me . . . an' I says to him, I says . . . like fun, says she, and I says . . . and he says to me . . . and then she says . . .

MA (who has succeeded in getting only partly undressed and is flopped over on the bunk):
Ooooh! ooooh!

MAMIE (in the same fix as Ma):
Ooogh! . . . ohhhhhhh! . . .

(Boat has now perfected a definite technique . . . first a soaring movement up, up, to the very top of the wave, then a violent shaking sideways that threatens to wrench all the timbers apart, then two tremendous slaps . . . BANG! BANG! and a sickening swo-o-o-op down, down to the bottom of the lake . . . up, UP . . . rrrrattle, rrrrattle . . . BANG! BANG! swooooooosh . . .)

BLANCHE (weakly):
Nell! . . . Nell!

NELL (thickly):
Huh?

BLANCHE: Listen to that! (BANG! BANG! Swoosh!) . . .
I know this boat's gonna break right in two.

NELL (thickly):
That's all right. We're in the front half.

(Well, that sounds reasonable enough . . . they'll have a helmsman to steer them anyway, while the poor devils in the rear half won't know where they're going.)

MA (sitting up with a tremendous effort):
D'ye hear that? Listen. The boat's going down. They're putting out the lifeboats.

MAMIE: I hope it sinks. Anything's better'n this.

(As the boat hits the waves the helmsman lets the wheel run loose and what Ma hears is the chain running out . . . this keeps up for hours, giving an added interest to the trip for those who are still conscious and really care whether the darn thing sinks or not . . . meanwhile another mysterious noise is heard in Ma's room, an almost ghostly sound, like castanets . . . click, click . . . click, click . . .)

MA (feebly):
It's a warning . . . listen . . . (click, click)
We're going to die . . . it's a warning (starts to cry).

MAMIE: Oooooh! . . . it's a ghost (click, click). I'm scared . . . (click, click). Ohhhhh!

"O, O, O! I'll never get undressed, I know."

GRANDMA (who has been dozing happily and awakens to hear the mysterious sounds):
Mamie, I wish you'd get up and get me my teeth. They're gonna get broke rattling around in that glass.

VOICES OUTSIDE: Eight bells and all's well. . . .

(And so the ghastly hours pass and the Potters drop off into a troubled sleep . . . which is troubled some more at a town where the boat pulls in and unloads forty-eight tons of scrap iron from heights of forty to eighty feet . . . the derricks are to lift it high enough so it will give a good ringing sound when it lights . . . and shortly after, when they are asleep once more, the purser comes along and raps on the door . . . "We dock in twenty minutes," says he; "time to dress" . . . grim humorist that he is . . . can you imagine the Potters dressing in twenty minutes after a night like that? . . . well, you needn't, for the boat has arrived, the gangplank is down, and here they come . . . is this Pa with the green face and the hollow eyes? . . . is this Ma with her hat on one side and her shoes laced every third hole, and is this Mamie dragging down the gangplank, all limp and sagging, with big rings under her eyes and hair like a mop? . . . it is, it is indeed . . . but who is this stepping along as gay and spry as you please, with a spring in her stride and a light in her eyes? . . . Grandma! herself! . . . and they thought she couldn't stand it . . . any old day . . . as she says herself, she'll live to eat the hen that scratches on her grave . . . incidentally, will the Potters stand their coming trip to the country as well as Grandma has stood city life? . . . we shall see . . .)

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

Paris Proclaims a Decided Trend Toward Odd ana Bizarre Wall Papers

Breakfast room done in yellow and black.

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—From Paris comes a batch of new wall papers which are unique in design and color. "Most unusual," we exclaim in amazement. "But how and where could such papers be used?"

"Well, they are indicative of a decided trend toward modern decoration," we are told by the head of the department, "and you'd be surprised to see how effectively they make up.

"I have just completed the most stunning breakfast room imaginable. The walls are papered with this." He turned to a sample of unfigured, intense lemon yellow. "Woodwork and floor are painted black. Edgings of scarlet decorate the black furniture. On a side table, between two windows, there is a pottery vase of turquoise blue.

"This vase, by the way, is a novel feature. It has, in addition to the top opening, several semi-cup shaped openings in the sides. These make it especially attractive as a setting for long stemmed blossoms or sprigs of flowering shrubs. The only wall decoration in the room is a motif of impressionistic flowers frescoed in bright, unshaded colors, in flattone, right on to the paper, in the space above the black marble mantel. An art student was engaged to do this piece of work."

A good idea of the general effect is given in the accompanying illustration. The lighting fixture is inclosed in a large wired globe, which is covered with lemon colored silk, with pipings of black. Silk gauze is used, in two layers, at the windows. The glass curtains, hanging just to the sill, are lemon color. These on the inside (turquoise green) extend to the floor and are caught back with cuffs. The effect of the sheer material in two colors, one over the other, gives an indescribable nuance.

"A woman who loves to seem mysteriouswanted to have her living room done in a style that would be different. I studied various arrangements for a while, and finally decided upon this black paper, closely covered with small gold stars. (This same paper comes in different colors, you see—jade pink, with silver stars.) Two large matched mirrors, in heavy dull gilt frames, hang on opposite walls. The furniture in this room is old blue. Striped silk, in old blue and old gold, separated by fine lines of black, is used for the cushions of the davenport and chairs.

"The davenport table has a cover of raspberry red satin damask, edged with black and gold. Old gold silk gauze is used for the window curtains. These are turned inward about ten inches at the top, to form a valance, and are finished with a French heading. Shirred cloth of gold, lined with raspberry red silk, and edged with one inch black and gold braid, is used for the lamp shades and shields.

"There's another paper with a black ground—the one with the Chinese figures in gold. That has been used to advantage in a modern bedroom. The furniture is enameled peacock green. Wistaria and peacock green changeable taffeta is used for the bed cover, with ruchings of solid peacock green. Woodwork is painted wistaria and the floor is black. Window hangings of madras, in an odd design, of green and wistaria, give a charming effect. The lamp shades on the dressing table are of flamingo silk, and boxed cushions of the same are used on the chair seats. Paper of this design may be had in Chinese blue, with figures in silver.

"That narrow striped paper of jade pink and pearl gray is especially attractive for a bedroom. Let me describe to you one in which it was most satisfactorily used. A deep damson carpet covers the floor. The furnishings are enameled oyster green. Silver silk poplin, with ruchings of jade pink taffeta, to match the stripes of the wall paper, is used for a bed cover. The shades on the little bedside lamp and those on the dressing table electric candlesticks are of green and pink silk, veiled with silver. Curtains of silver silk poplin, lined with jade pink, make the windows fascinating. A note of contrasting color is given by means of the bright jade green taffeta, which is used for the cushions of chairs and dressing table bench."

"What about the children's rooms?" we ask. "All of these odd and bizarre papers would be sadly amiss for them. What do you use?"

"This paper has been used in a number of children's rooms, and the effect has always been pleasing. You might not think, just to look at it here, that it would be quite appropriate, but really, it is. The ground of gray, the design of starfish in coral color, and the cockle shells and snail shells in black and white furnish the color scheme for the entire room. The furniture is painted gray, a tone darker than the background of the paper, and the woodwork is black. Coral colored organdy, matching the starfish, is used at the windows. Weighting is sewed to the bottom edge of the curtains to hold them in good lines.

"Coral colored rep, edged with black and white fringe, covers the bed and dresser. Sage green rep cushions are used to add a contrasting note of color. All of the materials used, being washable, are suited to a child's room.

"Gray furniture, enlivened as it is by colors, is as suitable as the conventional white or ivory, and is far more practical, because it does not show the inevitable finger marks which are sure to result when the 'pretty maids all in a row' grab hold, while they laugh at the 'silver bells and cockle shells' raining down on the coral colored starfish."

ASTROLOGY says that if you are seeking a mate with an understanding and sympathy with your hopes, ambitions, sorrows, foibles, and idiosyncrasies, and are born under the sign of Leo, which extends from July 23 to Aug. 22, you should select one born either in April or December.

Leo represents the heart, love, and emotions. Correspondingly, these persons possess a great variety of inclinations and dispositions, being in conjunction with the grand heart of the solar nature and a reciprocal center of all the forces in humanity. They are greatly affected by the mental and physical conditions of people to whom they stand intimately related.

They are naturally active, energetic, but subject to great extremes. They are controlled more by their intuitions than by reasoning power. Their love nature is their weakness, as they are easily led and misled. Leo people are born lovers and can no more live without sympathy and affection than a plant without water. If they do not get it from one source, they will seek it from another. So marriage with one who knows your faults as well as your virtues is necessary to a perfect union.

One born in April, or under the sign of Aries (March 21 to April 19) belongs to that function of the grand body of humanity—the head. The use of the head in the natural world is to think, to reason; therefore, Aries persons are natural reasoners and thinkers. Their brains, always busy, are the most active function of their bodies. They are independent characters and have their own ideas of right and wrong. They are a perfect balance for the Leo born. The function of the head is to keep the whole body in harmony, and for that reason harmony is the dominant feature of their natures.

Those born in December, or under the sign of Sagittarius (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21), the other complementary sign, have for their leading characteristic an executive spirit. They are bold, fearless, combative, and determined. They are persons of one thought and one idea at a time. They hate combinations of a secret nature, anything hidden or secret, to meet. They have kind, loving, and sympathetic natures which make up for their occasional high tempered outbursts.

They have great power over their sex natures and a natural inclination to chastity, from whence comes their great physical power. They are physically the strongest persons of all twelve signs. They know their own counsel concerning their affairs. Many of the greatest teachers, preachers, speakers, and leaders of reform come out of this sign. They have great competency at ferreting out the weaknesses of others and are able to make generous allowances.

The Leo born, astrology indicates, should choose for the marriage month either September or May, for during these months influences are working in his favor. The undertaking of any important changes in September or May in the life of the Leo born should provide the greatest success.

The less favorable months are supposed to be February, March, and July, during which time other serious transactions are urged not to be begun.

The Leo born is supposed to thrive best surrounded by the colors of red and gold, and to wear a ruby or sardonyx for good luck.

LOVE LETTERS

The Tribune will pay $5 for every love letter published Sun. All letters will be returned, and names of the ones you wish to retain will remain confidential.

FROM AN OLD ALBUM.

I have in my possession an old album, now yellow with age, which belonged to my grandmother. Among the steel engravings and beautifully written pages there is one which stands out as the most beautiful love letter I have ever read. It was written by Mary J. Grant, Gen. U. S. Grant's sister, to my grandmother, just before her marriage and departure for her prairie home in what was then considered "the west."

Wesleyan Female Seminary, Cincinnati, O., June 3, 1853.

Dear Susie: Mingled emotions of joy and sadness awakened — and wherefore? When you propose an album favor. The duty enjoined by friendship is a pleasant one, though a tender chord is touched with the simple effort to perform it.

Memory, the soul's cup bearer, invites me from the present to the past, and the mond's eye again beholds in panoramic view the halcyon days of school life, when first I learned to know and love you.

What pledges of loyalty we gave in our mutual promises to ever remain true to one another! Happily the lapse of time has found them unbroken, for absence is the reciprocal influence that binds heart to heart.

Ta often said: "The best of friends must part," and I realize with deep regret that you and I are on the verge of separation. Soon you will bid adieu to the home scenes of your youth to commence the new life which promises as much enjoyment. A faithful arm to lean upon and a loving, manly heart which beats responsive to your own seem indeed a guarantee of future happiness.

I fondly hope that you may quaff a brimming chalice, but it were vain to wish that no drops of sorrow are mingled there, for they are infused into every cup of joy even if not tasted till the last. I can though entertain the earnest hope that your coming life will be happy and serene—that the storm cloud may never gather so darkly in your mental sky as to entirely shut out the sunlight from your soul—that your Christian character may be strong in every trial and finally gain you an entrance into the "House not made with hands eternal in the Heavens."

And now, dear Susie, friend of my youth—may I ask of you a continuance of the generous love that you so freely bestow upon those who ask it? May it ever be mine to cherish as a precious souvenir—and, Susie, when you are far away in your prairie home of the west, will you sometimes voyage on the viewless pinions of thought to her who claims of you the endearing title of heart sister? MARY F. GRANT.

MY NICEST COMPLIMENT

What was the nicest compliment you ever got? Was it a tribute to achievement, social gifts, learning, beauty? Was it particularly apt and blunt, wittily done, or genuinely sincere? Write it out and send to the Compliment Editor, The Tribune Building. One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

His First Thought.

On Mothers' day my son, who is 10 years old, was given 10 cents for the show. Instead of going he went out and came back with a few chocolates in a bag. He came up so brave and big and gave me a big kiss and said: "For mother's day." A. N.

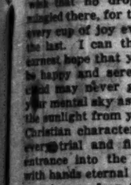
From Daughter to Mother.

The nicest compliment I ever received was from my little daughter. While I was sick in the hospital she came one day and found me sitting up in the wheel chair. "O, mother," she said, "why don't you have the door open and sit so everyone that passes can see you, because you look so beautiful today." B. A.

And Look Who Said It.

The nicest compliment ever paid me was by my stepmother, just one year my senior, with whom I lived a number of years as a girl, and now as a married woman. She said to me a few weeks ago:

"In all the years I have known you have you ever failed the slightest bit anything that was your duty."



The Value of Charcoal

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature; but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, and after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth, and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in

STUART'S Charcoal Lozenges

They are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, in tablet form, or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being sweetened to be smooth and palatable.

The daily use of these lozenges will be felt in a much improved condition of general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

Many physicians advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to patients suffering with gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion, and purify the breath, mouth and throat. Charcoal is also believed to greatly help the liver. These lozenges cost but thirty cents a box at drug stores, but you get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

MEN'S FASHIONS

This department will be glad to answer any questions regarding men's fashions and the correct thing to wear on different occasions. Address communications to A. T. Gallico, Chicago Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

THE FALSE NOTE.

By A. T. Gallico

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—There are times when one is being transported hither and yon in subway or train that one wearies of the morsels of reading matter supplied by the advertisements and the wanderings of one's own thoughts. But when this happens it is not necessary to give oneself up to impatience or boredom. There remains at the disposal a most interesting occupation—that of looking at traveling companions and mentally commenting upon the success or nonsuccess of their costumes.

Try it. Look at the men who sit across from you as you ride down town in the morning or home again at night, but in the latter case be charitable and make allowances for the inevitable soil of cuffs. Don't be satisfied with merely noting that this man presents a pleasing appearance while the man next to him is unfortunately dressed.

As I traveled in the subway the other day I studied the men opposite. The result of some of my observations may serve as an example of what I suggest. Number one was a young man of dark complexion who was trying to read a newspaper, but was having trouble turning the pages because of the draft in the car. He wore a dark blue suit of hard worsted, a gray cloth hat with a black band, cordovan oxfords, freshly shined, black silk socks, a white shirt, a four in hand tie of gray and blue stripes, and a small corner of blue edged handkerchief stuck out of his coat pocket. The effect was harmonious and made me feel that the young man had used thought, and had not put on the first tie he picked in the morning or thrown on his clothes without asking himself if the socks he had chosen were dark enough for the suit. And yet the effect was not forced.

To show how large a part just a pair of socks plays, had the young man worn a light gray, or light tan, or white, for instance, he would have been immediately removed from the ranks of the well dressed to that of the young man sitting next to him, whose white socks between dark shoes and and a dark suit were fit accompaniments of the jazz suit and cap over one eye, which made the whole effect cheap.

Not that white socks are forbidden the careful dresser, but they have a definite place, and that is with white trousers only. If you follow the rule that the socks should never be lighter than the shoe or the suit, you will be right. You know how bad a tan sock looks, for instance, with a black shoe, or a dark brown shoe, whereas a black sock is good with a tan shoe.

It is merely a matter of style. There is no reason why one should not wear white socks with a dark suit as one does a white shirt, except that it isn't done by the arbiters of fashion, and that is that.

On the other hand, if you are wearing a light colored summer suit you not only have the opportunity to wear light socks, provided they are not lighter than the suit, but they are usually preferable. Take the next man, on the other side of a large woman. He wore a light brown suit of tropical worsted, which was of good cut, and harmonized fortunately with his blonde hair. The accessories were pleasing except for one false note—the socks and shoes were both black. Black and brown are never a happy combination. The obvious shoe for this suit was a tan or possibly dark brown, while the sock should follow the rule and be a shade darker than the shoe and the trousers.

Passing on to the next man I was faced with another rather common error in footwear. This man wore a suit strictly of business or street cut. There was nothing of the sport type about it, and it was dark in hue. But accompanying it were sport shoes of elskin with brown saddles. A fine pair of shoes, but out of place. The time to wear sport shoes is with sport or country clothes. If the man in question had worn a pair of street shoes there would have been nothing to criticize in his costume. As it was, the effect was quite ruined.

And so on down the line. A loud tie, inharmony in color schemes, the wrong shoes are little things which spoil an entire costume.

"PIGTAILS"—By Mildred Burleigh

It's Easy Now to Curl Hair to Stay Curled

To curl the hair to stay curled, nothing equals the simple Silmerine method. If a little liquid Silmerine be applied with a clean sooth brush before doing up the hair, the loveliest wavy effect imaginable will be in evidence in three hours, and this will last a long time, regardless of temperature or humidity.

This harmless method is not to be compared with curling by means of a hot iron, because, instead of injuring the hair, it is really beneficial. A few ounces of liquid Silmerine, which may be procured at any drug store, will last for months. The best way is to divide the hair into strands and moisten each of them from root to tip. The curliness will look perfectly "natural," and the hair will be beautifully glossy, yet without the least greasiness or stickiness.

Worse and Worse.

I had a new maid, and great were my trials and tribulations trying to teach her the correct way to do things. I was most patient but generally at the most crucial moment all my careful training would be forgotten and there would be a dreadful slip.

One night I was having important company and, as usual, I gave Sara detailed instructions. The salad came and went and as yet there was no frightful error. I was congratulating myself.

My satisfaction was shortlived, for that moment the painstaking Sara came in with finger bowls and after setting one down before my guest she carefully laid a nice fresh towel on the table beside it!

Repenting at Leisure.

When I began to keep house a kindly neighbor often presented me with choice bits of baking. One morning she appeared on the scene with a basket containing a most delectable looking lemon pie.

"O, Mrs. Burton, "I hastily exclaimed, "I don't like to take this from you. I was going to bake a pie today and I am afraid I couldn't use two. It was kind of you to bring it to me."

"I just stopped in to tell you that it is raining on your pillows on the line. I'm on my way to mother's to take her this pie," my neighbor answered.

Malt Extract Is Only As Rich As The Malt

A SUIT of clothes is only as good as the cloth that goes into it. If the wool isn't there, the cloth isn't there. The cloth depends upon the wool and the tailor depends upon the cloth.

A Malt extract is only as rich as the malt that goes into it. And the malt is only as rich as the barley it is made out of. If the barley isn't there, the malt isn't there. The malt depends upon the barley and the maker depends upon the malt.

No tailor would put a lot of work on a poor piece of cloth because the result wouldn't be worth the effort.

Neither can you afford to put a lot of work on a poor malt extract because the result won't be worth the effort.

Puritan Malt Extract is the richest malt extract made anywhere in the world. This is so because it is made out of the choicest barley grown anywhere in the world. It is absolutely pure because it is not filled with moisture nor adulterated with cheap corn.

In buying malt extract, it actually doesn't pay in either time or labor to use any but the best. So ask for and demand

By Caroline Krum

Do you like Irene Castle? Glad whenever one of her pictures comes to town? I am, and only regret that we aren't given a few more. I like the way she dresses and the graceful way she walks. I like the independent little tilt of her independent little head. And I have yet to be disappointed in anything in which she appears.

She isn't a great actress, but she makes a charming effect. There are probably plenty of people who wouldn't miss her if she deserted the movies altogether. But then there are lots of people who don't like artichokes and alligator pears, and who wouldn't miss them either if they were unattainable.

"No Trespassing" has been adapted from Josiah C. Lincoln's novel, "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," and has for its setting the quaint New England village of Denboro. It is there that Roscoe Paine and his invalid mother have sought seclusion from the world. It is there, too, that Coltons, father, mother, and daughter, have their summer place.

IRENE CASTLE.
[Pacific and Atlantic Photo.]

Now it so happens that Paine owns a certain piece of land, through which runs a certain lane. It is the lane that fishermen of Denboro have used from time immemorial to go from the village to their boats and nets. It is the shortest way to the sea. And they have grown to consider it public property. Because of the kindness of the villagers to his mother, Paine has continued to let them have the use of it. Not until Colton père at the instigation of his wife, attempts to buy the property and close the lane to the public, is there any trouble.

BETTE BOUTON.
[Evans Photo.]

Paine is adamantine in his refusal to sell to Colton. Colton insists that he do so. Don't believe I'll tell you the tale that hange thereby, because, while it isn't compelling, I think you'll find it pretty entertaining stuff. And I'm sure you'll agree that it's been nicely and neatly done.

The rôle of Mabel Colton gives Mrs. Castle ample opportunity to change her frock, which is no less pleasing to her than to her audience. You'll find her in motoring garb, in riding and hiking outfits, in the most luscious of evening gowns, and the smartest of street dresses. Sounds a bit like an advertisement, doesn't it? Well, she looks like an illustration for one most of the time.

She and Ward Crane are an attractive couple. He's a tall, good looking chap with a serious way about him that is decidedly likeable.

The rest of the cast has been well selected and gives excellent support.

Charles Eldridge and Blanche Frederici do the most memorable work of the lesser lights, both of them cast in character parts. Wouldn't surprise me at all to know that they

BEST SELLERS OF THE AGES

Thirty-seventh Paper—Ibsen's "Doll's House": One of the Freedom Books.

Shakespeare and Ibsen, by an Actor and Teacher of Both.

Ibsen plays the actor rather than the actor Ibsen. In this he resembles Shakespeare more than does any other dramatist. At this point they touch. By Shakespeare materiality is shed and the naked soul is on view. Shakespeare does this with candor and that large sweep of unashamedness that characterized his time. By Ibsen the same effect is produced, with this difference: Ibsen, little by little, piece by piece, discloses his souls. He is economical of his views to the point of niggardliness. He will outrage no further than the exigencies of his play demand. Indication rather than discovery is his aim. In this he is like Shakespeare in intention but unlike him in execution. Except in "Hamlet," Shakespeare's characters are never self-conscious. They are exponents of a time when action followed swift upon thought and neither result nor means was calculated. Ibsen's characters are acutely introspective. Their time is taken up not with action but calculation—with following a thought up to its source, with investigating its tributaries. They are interested not so much in what they do as in what they think. Shakespeare has the universal outlook; Ibsen, the personal. Shakespeare lives in the open; Ibsen breathes the dead, flat air of the house. Shakespeare's vision is bounded only by the horizon, which, as we try to approach it, is always in the distance, never to be reached. Ibsen sees no further than the result which his character's thinking has upon that character and his fellow characters. Shakespeare's people commit crimes; Ibsen's indulge in vices. Shakespeare's catastrophes are tornadoes, striking down the innocent and the guilty, the just and the unjust, strewing the stage with dead bodies, as in "Hamlet." Ibsen's are brought about by a sly, slow, creeping miasma, from the north, to be sure, but not less deadly because cold. Shakespeare has entered into the very life-blood of the English-speaking peoples, molding, shaping, influencing; Ibsen, by his perfect sense of form, his economy in the use of material, the intensity of his modern point of view, has changed the whole face of the playwriting world. Norwegian, English, French, German, Italian, and Spanish, by their later works, acknowledge his mastership.

WILLIAM OWEN.

THE stage of the whole world is honester today and the position of women is better because forty-three years ago Henrik Ibsen wrote the play called "A Doll's House." It was—and it continues to be, for its work is not yet done—one of the emancipatory documents of the race. Nor is it merely a thesis. As a fabric of art it has made resplendent history. The names of almost all the women who in our time have caused the stage to mean something in the spiritual life of the people are connected with the rôle of Norma Helmer. Agnes Sorma, the German—probably the greatest Nora that ever was; Eleanora Duse, the Italian—in some of the scenes perhaps the most eloquent; Minnie Maddern Fiske, the American—a Nora at once incomparably piteous and incomparably resolute; Janet Achurch, the Englishwoman—a valiant pioneer with the part on the London stage; Gabrielle Rejane, the Frenchwoman of the inexhaustible technical facility; Helena Modjeska, the Pole, who touched with distinction everything she did; Betty Hennings of the National theater, Christiania, who "created," as the stage phrase has it, almost all the great Ibsen female rôles; Alla Nazimova, the Russian, who was at least curious and sometimes illuminating in the part, and Ethel Barrymore, the American, who would have been great in it had she lived with it long.

'Tis a dazzling list. It represents eight nationalities.

Mrs. Fiske used to say that there were only twelve rôles in latter-day drama to be compared, as to the intellectual opportunities they afford an actress, with the great rôles of the classic drama. Of the twelve, eight were out of the "theater" of Henrik Ibsen, and one of them was Nora Helmer.

In the clear type and well leaded page of the Modern Literary edition of Ibsen's plays, which, though not the best edition, is the cheapest and the most readily obtainable edition of Ibsen, "A Doll's House" makes a booklet of only seventy-seven pages. In Mrs. Henrietta Frances Lord's translation—with a page of equal size but not so full—which the Appletons published eighteen years ago, it makes 119 pages.

This point is emphasized because it is heartening for us average readers, who after all have other interests in the world than reading, to realize that, after having had ten volumes of a history of the English revolution hurled at our heads, there are masterpieces of great urgency and interest of which we can get the savor in three hours. Is that not the great utility of the dramatic form, either in print or enacted? And that is why players and theatrical managers ought ever to be encouraged—and hectored—to give us those masterpieces of great urgency and interest. They can give us so

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

Last week's composite list of best sellers at five leading Chicago book stores was:

FICTION.

"Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton.
"The Breaking Point," by Mary Roberts Rinehart.
"Peter Whiffle," by Carl Van Vechten.
"The Mother of All Living," by Robert Keable.
"The Return," by Walter de la Mare.
"Mortal Coils," by Aldous Huxley.

NONFICTION.

"Outline of Science," by Prof. J. Arthur Thomson.
"Behind the Mirrors."
"The Mind in the Making," by Dr. James Harvey Robinson.

AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Six books most in demand at the Chicago public library last week were:
"Peter Whiffle," by Carl Van Vechten.
"The Vehement Flame," by Margaret Deland.
"Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton.
"The Mind in the Making," by Dr. James Harvey Robinson.
"My Memories of Eighty Years," by Chauncey Depew.
"Books and Characters," by Lytton Strachey.

By Fanny Butcher.

EIGHT years ago there appeared a volume of plays called "Thirst." In those days every member in good standing of the janitors' union was writing a one act play or acting in one that his wife or sister-in-law had written. Volumes of plays, works on the drayma, privately printed one acters, were so numerous that you had to shovel them off your desk before you could find the ordinary normal literary output of the day. Every one who could borrow a typewriter was celebrating what he or she considered to be a dramatic moment. It is little wonder that in that mêlée "Thirst"—titles which might mean all, and might mean nothing. . . . Anyway, "Thirst" appeared and disappeared almost in a revolution of its paternal printing press.

EUGENE O'NEILL.

It would be a comforting thing to an aging critic to be able to say that she recognized its author as the future "great American dramatist," but she must admit that she didn't give herself a chance to be one of the first to see the flicker of genius there—she didn't even read it until two years or so later, when she sought it out, dug it up, as it were from the potter's field of the unknown and unsung. Her contrition would be more profound if any one else had seen its glimmer of immortality. No one did. If it was read by any one, it was certainly not the cause of burbling joy on the part of critics. I suspect that others looked upon it with the same suspicious eye, and gave it to the laundress who had a daughter who belonged to the Thesplans who wondered if perhaps the miss might have a book, etc.

Then came rumors of powerful, unpleasant plays which were being done by the Provincetown Players, a real interest in them, the hint that there had been a volume of plays already published, the search for them, the finding. At about that time there was raging the warfare between the commercial and the art theaters. They would ever be the east and the west of the drama. Never the twain should meet. Then came "The Moon of the Caribbees" with many of the plays that had been shaking the ashes out of the minds of those who had seen them in the experimental theater of the Provincetown Players. And then "Beyond the Horizon," that play which assumed, as you looked at it, superhuman form, a form that somehow reached its skinny hand to your throat and pressed its fingers, iron hard, until you knew that you were choking, that whenever you thought of it you must choke at the sheer cruel inevitableness of fate, of life. And then you realized, suddenly, that that was what you

Discussing, Seriatim, the Dramatic Editor's Mail

By Sheppard Butler.

ONE of the penalties of a vacation is that one has to come back. Returning from wanderings wherein the joys of the Michigan lakes withstood comparison satisfactorily with those in the Chicago theaters, the dramatic editor confronts a desk bristling with minatory reminders of duties to be performed, wrongs to be righted, mysteries to be explained, apologies to be offered. New plays, old complaints, exigent disputations on this and that demand attention. There it is, the bundle of accumulated mail, a thing of infinite and disturbing variety, treating, in a manner of speaking,

Of shoes—and ships—and sealing-wax—
Of cabbages—and kings—
And why the sea is boiling hot—
And whether pigs have wings.

MISS HELEN HAYES
in "To the Ladies!" the season's first arrival at Cohan's Grand.

H. G. R., for example, writes pessimistically of ticket scalping, hoping that something will be done about it this year, but proposing no better remedy than the establishment of "a forum for personal experiences of disgusted theater goers." This is depressing—the more so since H. G. R. cannot be offered much reassurement. Unless all signs fail, the new season will see, not less ticket scalping than usual, but a great deal more.

Newcomers are in the field, 'tis said, in the persons of Messrs. Bathhouse John Coughlin and Hinky Dink Kenna, aldermen from the First ward. Seeking more worlds to conquer, they come, the story has it, replete with funds and influence, to make all previous adventures in scalping look insignificant. Opposing them will be Miss Florence Couthoui, with her many "stands" and theater contracts, and the various lesser lights. It looks like a great year for the agencies, and a strenuous one for the ticket seeking public. So much for that.

Mr. Pollock Expostulates Concerning "The Fool."

Rebuke, gentle but unmistakable, is conveyed in another letter. Thus:

The Parsonage, Shoreham, L. I.

My Dear Mr. Butler: My curiosity has been aroused by two statements in your recent comment on my new play, "The Fool."

1. You allude to the "old question." What would happen to a man who, today, tried to live according to the teachings of Jesus Christ? My familiarity with fiction and drama does not enable me to recall one novel or play in which this question has been asked. As "there is nothing new under the sun," I know I must be wrong, and, moreover, since this axiom must be as trite to you as to me, I am sure you would not have made this slighting allusion without dozens of instances at your finger tips. May I beg you to share your information with me, and give me the names of the prior works that make my theme "old"?

2. You seem to disapprove of the momentary appearance of the Christ—as a matter of fact, the figure is never really identified, and is supposed to come only into the mind of a man overwrought—in a story "modern and secular." As to the "modern," was there ever a better time for the coming of Christ, or for a reminder of His teachings? As to the "secular," into what circle would He be more likely to come? What circle could need Him more? In answer to that, we have scores of Jesus' own pronouncements, together with a record of His life among "sinners." Fresh from a review of the New Testament, I can recall only once, after He had reached maturity, that the Savior went among people not "secular," and that was to drive them from the temple.

MISS PAULINE FREDERICK back from the movies, as the Woods tomorrow in "The Guilty One."
[White photo.]

"The Fool" may be a good play, or a bad one, but it was most seriously intended, conceived with the best possible purpose, and I deny the offense or the blasphemy of bringing the precepts of the Great Teacher—or even a vision of that Teacher—into a work designed as a reminder of them. For what other purpose was our theater founded, and for what other purpose is the church maintained? I cannot help feeling that these precepts are not the less helpful and appropriate because they are applied to "modern" and "secular" conditions, rather than to conditions "mystical" or "historical." Respectfully,

CHANNING POLLOCK.

Not much, perhaps, can be said in reply to that. In self-justification, how-

The Vibration-less Engine has been Achieved—it's the New 6-CYLINDER Stearns-Knight!

FROM the beginning automotive engineers have had as their goal—the vibration-less gasoline engine. Many have felt that such an engine would never be built. All have sought for it in vain—until now!

The vibration-less engine is here! We sincerely believe that this is the first time such a motor has been achieved.

To The F. B. Stearns Company, for twenty-five years a pioneer in practical motor car improvements, goes the honor of designing and building this long-sought-for ideal

the 6-CYLINDER Stearns-Knight Engine

In this new engine the flow of power is perfectly smooth—the blending of the cylinder impulses is ideal—the acceleration is a delight—the flexibility is astonishing. And most remarkable of all—there is no periodic vibration. It means that in this new 6-cylinder Stearns-Knight Motor there have been brought together all the splendid qualities for which the six, as a type, is so highly regarded—and in addition, that ideal of ideals—no vibration.

You can not know—you can not appreciate what all this means until you have driven this remarkable new 6-cylinder Stearns-Knight. Nor until you drive it, can you realize what a tremendous advance in automotive engineering it represents.

This new 6-cylinder Stearns Sleeve-Valve Motor Car offers the same high dependability that has always been associated with the products of The F. B. Stearns Company. And more—it offers you the joy of owning a car with a vibration-less engine, something that has never before been possible.

A demonstration will prove a revelation. Come in today.

Extract from a letter to the president of The F. B. Stearns Company from the inventor of the famous Knight Sleeve-Valve Engine after a recent visit of inspection to the factory:

"—I am still thinking of that beautiful six of yours. The engine dimensions please me awfully well—the length of the connecting rods, the position of the eccentric shaft, the shape of the lugs on the sleeves, and the fine workmanship which makes a motor with long life and smooth action. I like the proportions about the best of any engine I have ever seen. With kind regards.

Unusually Attractive Payment Plan

The Dramatic Editor's Mail

ever, one or two things may be submitted.

First: To one brought up in an evangelical faith the matter of living according to the teachings of Jesus Christ seems as old as the New Testament itself. That current problems should be confronted with the question, "What would Jesus do?" is a fundamental tenet with some millions of Christians. And what would happen if such a practice were faithfully adhered to is a matter of constantly recurring conjecture. These facts and not "dozens of instances" were in mind when the lines that caught Mr. Pollock's eye were written. Nor was any "slighting allusion" intended.

Second: No word of disapproval was ventured as to the appearance of Christ in the play. Merely, the expedient was referred to as "rare and perilous"—and, therefore, interesting. That it is rare in the commercial theater goes without saying. That it is perilous seems almost equally self-evident. If it can be achieved without offense it is a triumph, and if Mr. Pollock has so achieved it he is entitled to nothing but praise.

Incidentally, and without any bearing on this discussion, it may be said that when Richard Bennett acted the play this summer in Los Angeles the apparition of Christ occasioned a great deal of argument. Also that "The Fool" is now being prepared for presentation in New York, where, it is said on the best of authority, the vision will be eliminated.

Mr. Young's "Fall Frolics."

The mail pile diminishes slowly. Here is a neatly typewritten request that some account be given of Mr. Ernie Young's new show, "Fall Frolics," revealed last week at the Marigold. Flying northward on the wings of duty, one discovers at this sylvan retreat the usual "beautiful-bountiful bevy of bewitching buds" (the playbill is authority for that) in evolutions somewhat more lively and less austere than in previous exhibitions of the series.

LEONETTE BALL, at the Marigold.

For sheer loveliness, the ladies of Mr. Young's lavish ensemble are seldom surpassed in any of the standard theaters. Decked out in the bizarre trappings of the modern revue, they are regal indeed. Ordinarily they do little but walk about, but in this instance they dance, demonstrating their prowess chiefly in a concerted number called "Shufflin' Feet"—forty heels and toes tapping as one. This interlude would be effective anywhere.

As to the rest, the entertainment runs mostly to trick costumes—huge, flaring skirts from which the chorus steps, leaving them standing on the stage, and droll animated trees which the diminutive ballet investigates from the tops of little ladders. There are symbolic ceremonies involving the sun, moon, and some perilously clad planets; songs by the lustrous Miss Ann Greenway and the twinkling Miss Leonette Ball; breakneck clowning all over the place by one Frank Libuse, and other diversions. It's a good show, but not Mr. Young's best.

So much, again, for that. Shall we investigate further? Many missives remain, among them:

A demand that the public be told why the Majestic is abandoning its aristocratic traditions and going in for "cut rate" vaudeville.

A reminder from Mr. Woods' representative in Chicago that the commercial value of "The Guilty One" depends "wholly and solely" on the critics' refraining from revealing the plot of the play.

A reminder from Mr. Tyler's representative in Chicago that his commercial value depends wholly and solely on having a great deal in the papers about "To the Ladies!"

How about deferring these and the rest for future consideration? The mail has had attention enough.

Gossip of the Theaters.

What may be termed the second flight of plays for the new season is beginning to take form. To Powers', after H. B. Warner has finished his forthcoming engagement in "Bull Dog Drummond," will come Allan Pollock in Clemence Dane's effective drama, "A Bill of Divorcement." The date for this has not been set, since "Bull Dog Drummond" is to remain as long as it holds the favor of this public. At the new Selwyn "The Circle" is likely to be followed by the all-colored entertainment, "Shuffle Along," which apparently has abandoned its projected invasion of England. The Selwyn seems a curious destination for the show, but it is having enormous success at the like named theater in Boston, and the Selwyns are highly enthusiastic over its persistent vogue.

The Studebaker, in October, will have Eugene O'Neill's "The Hairy Ape," and at the Playhouse "The White Peacock" probably will be followed by Charles Cherry in "The Dover Road," by A. A. Milne. The Milne play has been given tentative booking at the Princess, but this conflicts with the hoped for long run of "The Cat and the Canary." Also headed this way is "The Man Who Never Grew Up," by one John Wallack, due to arrive about nine weeks hence. It has already been told that Fritz Leiber will reach the Olympic in October with plays of Shakespeare, and that Frank Craven will occupy the Woods in November with his own comedy, "The First Year."

Miss Marjorie Rambeau's appointment to come to the Garrick next Sunday in "The Goldfish" has been canceled. She will remain a while longer in New York, and the Garrick, after another week of "For Goodness Sake," will be closed, to be made ready for the start of the Shubert vaudeville season. Miss Rambeau probably will be seen at some other Chicago theater a few weeks hence. G. W.

Miss Clara Moores, recently at Ye Liberty in "Lilies of the Field," will return soon to act with John Drew and Mrs. Leslie Carter in "The Circle," at the Selwyn. She will have the part formerly played by Miss Estelle Winwood.

MISS MARJORIE BURGESS.
[White photo.]

There are but two women in the cast of "Bull Dog Drummond," the exciting melodrama which H. B. Warner brings to Powers' next week, and Miss Burgess is one of them.

who approaches the Olympic in "The Rubicon."

Miss Marjorie Gateson, departed not long since from "For Goodness Sake," now joins her fortunes with another show which had an uncertain summer career in Chicago. She will be among those present when "Molly Darling," lately a tenant of the Palace Music hall, is revealed in revised form in New York next week. Other participants will be Miss Mary Milburn (in the rôle played here first by Miss Polly Walker and then by Miss Delyle Alda); Jack Donahue, the dancing comedian, and some members of the original company, including the pair known as Billy and Billie Taylor.

Between performances of "Her Temporary Husband," with Miss Juliette Day, rehearsals of "Her Temporary Husband" with Miss Ann Andrews are in progress at the Cort. Miss Andrews, last seen here with Grant Mitchell in "The Champion," will succeed Miss Day when the play departs, headed for New York, at the end of this week. Various other changes are being made, both in the cast and in the play itself.

George C. Tyler, in Chicago for the opening of Miss Helen Hayes' run in "To the Ladies!" says that, when Miss Laurette Taylor next visits Chicago, it will be in her capacity as an actress of répertoire, and that she will then appear in "Humoresque," new this season; "The National Anthem," the play about gin and jazz, in which she spent last season in New York City; and "The Land of Happiness," in which in 1916 she effected her return to the United States after her two years' London run in "Peg o' My Heart." She is now engaged in filming the last named play.

Miss Margaret Anglin defers for the present her plan to appear in a dramatization of Dickens' "Bleak House." She now proposes to start her season in New York next month in "The Sea Woman," something by an unidentified St. Louis author, and to turn later to the "Bleak House" play, which she completed in Chicago, in collaboration with Paul Kester, while she was playing here in "The Woman of Bronze." It is called "The Great Lady Dedlock," and in it Miss Anglin will have a dual rôle, impersonating both Lady Dedlock and Hortense.

The New Plays

Impressive List of Attractions Scheduled to Start Another Season in Chicago Theaters.

APPOINTMENTS have now been made for the reopening of all the downtown theaters except the Central, for which nothing is in sight, and the Studebaker, taken for October, but still without booking for the time intervening. The list of forthcoming plays is an impressive one, running, in the order of their arrival, as follows:

OPENING TONIGHT.

"To the Ladies!" (Cohan's Grand)—A new comedy by George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly, the authors of "Dulcy," with Miss Helen Hayes in the rôle of a young woman whose husband finds himself amusingly dependent on her for his business success. Allen Kearns will have the leading male part, played in New York by Otto Kruger, and others in the cast will be Carl Anthony, Isabel Irving, William Seymour, and Louis Harrison.

OPENING TOMORROW NIGHT.

"The Guilty One" (Woods)—Miss Pauline Frederick, returning to the footlights after eight years in the movies, with a "modern drama" from the pens of Michael Morton, author of "The Yellow Ticket," and one Peter Traill. The piece has murder in it, and mystery. Among Miss Frederick's assistants will be Charles Dalton, Charles Waldron, Ian Keith, Henry Warwick, and Ethel Intropidi.

OPENING NEXT WEEK.

"Thank-U" (Cort, Aug. 27)—A comedy by Winchell Smith and Tom Cushing, dealing with the meager salaries enjoyed by ministers in some of our small town communities. The players will include Harry Davenport, Edith King, Donald Foster, Frank Munroe, and Phyllis Rankin.

"The Rubicon" (Olympic, Aug. 27)—A comedy of uncommon frankness in the matter of sex, adapted by Henry Baron from the French of Edouard Bourdet. New York was perturbed by it. Miss Estelle Winwood will have the leading rôle, played hitherto by Miss Violet Heming, and others involved will be Warburton Gamble and Paul Gordon.

"The Perfect Fool" (Illinois, Aug. 27) Ed Wynn, an amiable and industrious jester, in another revue of his own devising. His long list of entertainers includes Janet Velie, Flo Newton, Jay Velie, Anita Furman, and the three Meyakos.

Vaudeville (Palace, Aug. 27)—The first bill of the new season at the Palace, with John Steele, the tenor, as the headliner.

"Good Morning, Dearie" (Colonial, Aug. 28)—A sprightly Dillingham musical show, accounted one of the best in New York last season. Among the performers will be Louise Groody, Oscar Shaw, Harland Dixon, William Kent, Ada Lewis, Marie Callahan, Primrose Caryll, and sixteen of John Tiller's English dancing girls.

Continuous Vaudeville (Majestic, Aug. 31)—The start of a new régime for the Majestic, with five shows a day, bargain prices, and no reserved seats.

"Bull Dog Drummond" (Powers', Sept. 1)—H. B. Warner, long absent from these parts, in a rip-roaring English melodrama of the "drop that gun, you yellow cur," variety. The play is founded on "A Book of Adventure," by an author who signs himself only as "Sapper."

IMPENDING JOYS.

"The White Peacock" (Playhouse, Sept. 3)—Mme. Olga Petrova in a florid play of her own authorship, Spanish as to atmosphere and with love as its theme.

"The Cat and the Canary" (Princess, Sept. 3)—A hair raising thriller by John Willard which has attained vast popularity in the east. The special Chicago company will include Ralph Morgan, Miriam Doyle, Edna Archer Crawford, and John C. King.

"The Circle" (Selwyn, Sept. 15)—A drama of fine distinction by Somerset Maugham, chosen as the inaugural attraction for the new Selwyn theater in Dearborn street. John Drew will be in it, as will Mrs. Leslie Carter, long a stranger to Chicago, and Miss Clara Moores.

"Six-Cylinder Love" (Harris, Sept. 16)—William Anthony McGuire's amusing comedy of early married life, coming to open the Selwyn's "twin"—if the workmen get out in time. Ernest Truex will have the leading rôle.

"Bombo" (Apollo, Sept. 17)—Al Jolson in his new show, compounded in about equal parts of girls, scenery, and a travesty on the story of Christopher Columbus.

"The Blushing Bride" (Great Northern, Sept. 17)—A musical comedy dominated by the presence of Cecil Lean and Miss Cleo Mayfield.

"Hello Everybody" (Garrick, Sept. 17)—First of the new Shubert "unit shows" to be seen during the season of vaudeville at the Garrick. Miss Gertrude Hoffman will be the chief performer.

"The Mountebank of Emotions" (La Salle, Oct. 2)—Leo Ditrichstein in his new play by Ben Hecht.

"The Hairy Ape" (Studebaker, Oct. 2)—Eugene O'Neill's grim drama of the emotional adventures of a ship's stoker, with Louis Wolheim in the principal rôle.

"The Dover Road" (Playhouse, probably Oct. 2)—A whimsical comedy by A. A. Milne, with Charles Cherry, Kathleen Comegys, Molly Pearson, and others.

A MORGAN DANCER.
[Apeda photo.]

Anonymity is the lot of the young women who participate in Miss Marion Morgan's annual dance productions for the varieties, since this California impresario always declines to identify any of her performers for the public prints. The nameless figurante pictured will be at the Majestic this week, with others, in some spirited evolutions of the variety known as classic, conferring a patrician atmosphere on the theater's last week of "big time" vaudeville. Beginning the last day of this month continuous performances at bargain prices will be the rule.

Tang of Salt Air Pervades Irene Castle's New Picture

provided you with quite a set of shudders.

But the thing I will carry longest with me is the feeling of the little New England town. The director has installed the picture with atmosphere and local color. The air is damp and salty —you can feel the tang of it. And the house tucked away near Shore Lane, where Roscoe Paine and his mother live, filled with the rag rugs and spindly chairs of generations ago, will fill you with envy. If you don't want to go right out and get one just like it, I miss my guess. It's perfectly adorable.

BROWSING BACKWARD

My Dear Miss Tinée: I have long been tempted to offer a contribution to your "Browsing Backward" columns, for I had been going to the movies a long time when "The Great Train Robbery" was produced, and I remember Mary Pickford in her first picture, "Lena and the Geese."

After careful consideration and industrious consultation of my files I submit the following as my own list of the world's twelve greatest photo plays:

1. "Broken Blossoms."
2. "Orphans of the Storm."
3. "The Miracle Man."
4. "Deception."
5. "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari."
6. "Intolerance."
7. "The Kid."
8. "Poor Little Rich Girl."
9. "Prunella."
10. "The Birth of a Nation."
11. "Little Lord Fauntleroy."
12. "The Three Musketeers."

While a second list would run as follows:

1. "Way Down East."
2. "Stella Maris."
3. "Passion."
4. "The Golem."
5. "Cabiria."
6. "The Blue Bird."
7. "Enoch Arden."
8. "Judith of Bethulia."
9. "Hearts of the World."
10. "The Four Horsemen."
11. "Joan the Woman."
12. "The Last of the Mohicans."

I am not making a list of worst pictures, but if I were, I should reserve high places for "The Shiek," Nazimova's "Heart of a Child," and Theda Bara's "Salome."

The question becomes more difficult when we inquire concerning the screen's greatest characterizations. But the following list is at least representative, and, I think, not manifestly unfair:

1. Lillian Gish as Henriette Girard or Anna Moore, or Lucy, or Annie Lee. Take your choice: you can't overestimate Miss Gish.
2. Mary Pickford. Her matchless sincerity made even "Pollyanna" a great rôle. I think her best characterizations are Dearest in "Fauntleroy," Gwen in "Poor Little Rich Girl," Unity Blake in "Stella Maris," and her almost forgotten Cho-Cho-San
3. Richard Barthelmess' Cheng Huan in "Broken Blossoms."
4. Dorothy Gish's Little Disturber in "Hearts of the World."
5. Henry Walthall's Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation."
6. C. Spencer Chaplin's Charlie, especially in "The Kid" and "Shoulder Arms."
7. Clarine Seymour's White Almond Blossom in "The Idol Dancer."
8. John Bunny's fat man in his prehistoric series of comedies. (Why under the sun doesn't somebody revive them?)
9. Sidney Drew's Henry Minor in his series of comedies.
10. May Marsh's Dear One in "Intolerance."
11. Geraldine Farrar's Joan of Arc, or Carmen.
12. Theodore Roberts in anything. I liked him best in "M'liss."

KICK KORNER

Dear Miss Tinée: A Kick Korner correspondent, speaking of the "The Storm," says he thought one had to wait for a crust to form to walk on snowshoes. Snowshoes are at their best in soft snow, the wide lattice work spreading the weight and packing the snow. They are awkward on a crust. Also he objects to forest fires in spring. I have seen the air in Maine yellow with smoke blown from Canadian forest fires in April.

S. L.

[Editor's note: We wondered if we wouldn't hear about this from some of you.]

Dear Kick Korner: A kick on a kick —being an answer to the kick of Parva of Aug. 13. When we first saw the stage version of "The Storm," many of us were of the opinion that forest fires were out of season in the early spring when the melting snow and ice dampened the trees. The Canadian newspapers of April and May of 1920 daily contained news of the devastating forest fires in New Brunswick, which, thought out of season, actually did occur. Your correspondent, Parva, should know that snowshoes are to be worn on the soft snow to keep from sinking in, and the improvement on the snowshoe, to be worn when there is a crust on the surface, generally late in the season, is the "ski" or "glider."

L. G.

[Editor's Note—More of the same.]

Dear Miss Tinée: I saw "Borderland" tonight and I think it's the worst picture I've seen in years. And you will oblige me greatly if you will pass my opinion on to its ambitious exhibitors.

H. H.

Dear Mae Tinée: Why is it getting to be impossible for the title writers to omit "cussing" in their titles. Of the average fifteen titles to the reel, about three or four are devoted to such language. Tonight in the "Man Unconquerable" I heard several small children repeating the profanity and laughing about it. They learn soon enough without teaching it to them in the films. Seems to me it's the title writers that need cleaning up, and not the actors.

M. L. R.

CLOSEUPS

We hear Mabel Normand is coming back from Europe the first of next month. She is scheduled to start work on a special comedy feature provided for her by Mr. Sennett.

In "A Gypsy Cavalier," M. Georges Carpentier has a dual rôle—that of a dilettante aristocrat and of a gypsy. Other members of the cast are Flora le Breton, Mary Clare, Rex McDougall, Norma Whalley, Nell St. John Montague, Hubert Carter, William Luff, A. B. Imeson, Sir Simeon Stuart, Percy Standing, and Henry Latimer. Charles Stuart Blackton, small son of the producer, plays the part of the hero as a boy.

Agnes Ayres' new picture is "A Daughter of Luxury," by Beulah Marie Dix. Paul Powell is to be the director.

MISS MARIE CALLAHAN.

She is an important and (as you see) pleasantly pictorial figure in "Good Morning, Dearie," coming to the Colonial a week from tomorrow night.

Ask Me! Ask Me! Ask Me!

INQUISITIVE: Sorry, but that's something we can't decide for you. People have such different ideas about beauty, you know. And popularity is based on so many things. What do you think about it?

S. Z. B.: Thanks for the suggestion. We'll bear it in mind, S. Z. B., and see what we can do about it for you.

O. V.: Well, we are glad you wrote to us when you were in the mood. I'll tell you what it means at the end of this. Watch and see. Yes, May McAvoy's hair is lovely. Did you see her in her blonde wig? Looks like a doll. No, you haven't hit it just right, but it sounds nice anyway. You're welcome.

RITA: Monte Blue was born in Indianapolis in 1890. He's 6 feet 2, weighs 185, and has brown hair and eyes. Haven't heard about his being married.

H. H. D.: We'll try to get the picture you ask for into the roto soon. It won't be a bother, either. We like your favorites, too!

CURIOUS: Mabel Ballin played the lead in "Other Women's Clothes," and her husband directed her. Wanda Hawley took the part of Ruth Sheldon in "The Love Charm." No trouble. Come again.

MARIANNE: Adele Rowland is Conway Tearle's wife. Address him at the Friars club, New York.

C. J. P.: If you're planning to ask for a picture of Rodolf Valentino don't forget to send along 35 cents. That's what he charges. His address is 7139 Hollywood boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

N. Y. Equiteers Pick a Play

The New York Times.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—[Special.]—The Actors' Equity association is apparently mindful of the fact that a large number of people are waiting anxiously for a chance to shake mournful heads in the event that the Equity players happen to produce a bad play as their first venture at the Forty-eighth Street theater. Accordingly, unusual care is being taken to insure that the first one shall be good.

The present indications are that the first play will be a piece entitled "The New Englander," written by Abby Merchant. "The New Englander" is a tragedy and is reported to be a particularly fine one. Miss Merchant is a comparative newcomer in the theater, although her "Irish Dew" was produced on tour a season ago. A comedy of her authorship is also scheduled for New York production this year.

An actor who was recently offered the leading rôle in "Banco," which William Harris plans to produce, actually rejected the rôle because he thought the play was too likely to be successful. Mr. Harris stipulated that the actor who created the leading rôle must play it during the American life of the piece, and the actor, after reading the play, estimated that it would endure for at least three seasons. That, he declared, was longer than he cared to play a single rôle. Though, perhaps, as Brock Pemberton pointed out, he merely thought it would endure for three seasons with him in it.

Bernard Shaw, Translator.

Lawrence Langner of the directors of the Theater guild is back from an European trip. Among the plays that he returned with are one by J. Wasserman, author of those much discussed two volumes, "The World's Illusion," a new play by Georg Kaiser, author of "From Morn to Midnight," and "Gitta's Atonement," a play translated—yes, translated—from the Austrian by George Bernard Shaw. Mr. Shaw seems to have translated the play as an act of courtesy—its author, he said, had been translating the Shaw plays for so long that he felt like returning the compliment. (Incidentally, Mr. Shaw changed the play from a tragedy to a comedy in the course of adapting it, a circumstance which may mellow him somewhat in his attitude toward changes in his own works.)

Then, too, Mr. Langner arranged for the Russian stage director, Th. Komisarsevsky, to come here for two seasons to stage plays for the guild.

"Tons of Money" Doubtful.

Despite the fact that it is a huge London success, "Tons of Money" does not seem to have fared any too well when it received its first American performance in Atlantic City last Sunday night. The announcement of the postponement of the New York opening, which had been set for next Monday, declared that the theater was not yet ready, but this appears now to have been rather a harmless bit of fiction. The latest report, at all events, is that Mr. Dillingham will make important changes in the cast, at the very least, before the play is brought to New York. The leading rôle is being played in Atlantic City by Homer B. Mason, a vaudevillian, who is said to have been too reminiscent of vaudeville.

William Faversham will appear in vaudeville next week in "A Marriage Has Been Arranged," by Sutro.

Another "Passing Show" is being made ready for the Winter Garden, which would mean the transfer of "Spice of 1922," its present tenant, to another house in a month or so.

The Shuberts are planning to produce a Viennese opertata called "Youth." It will open in Philadelphia on Labor day.

On the Road to Anywhere Urged by Demon Speed

By Mme. X.

THERE is nothing yet devised by man for pure delight that surpasses the joy of motoring swiftly along good roads, through a green and peaceful landscape, one where low, wooded hills, lush pastures and golden fields fill the round horizon, while the sun and summer breezes complete the sense of contentment. There is a newly discovered passion developed in mankind since the beginning of the century, that of swift motion.

We thought we knew its allure before the days of automobiles. In winter we once sped in low cut sleighs to which were harnessed fast horses that kicked snow into our blinking eyes. In summer the same amiable quadrupeds ran as fast as they could either under the saddle or in harness and we thought we were happy, but we knew nothing in that vanished era of the real thrills which are the lot of motorists today. The space devouring, snorting, roaring dragons that sweep us from place to place contribute more to the sum of human happiness than anything that has come into use since Adam and Eve stepped out of that much over rated garden. Especially is this so in this country and especially is it so on the three last days of the week.

It is an education to set forth, as a party of five of us did last week, and to see the roads in all directions thick with motors full of cheerful folk, their camping outfits lashed to their running boards, all set for a tour, spurrying from village to village. In each stopping place there are many signs pointing to the camping sites which have been prepared and set apart for just such tourists. Along the route there are many more signs urging the traveler to go to this or that or the other eating place or hotel. The countryside is eager for the trade of these thousands of wayfarers.

Speed! Speed! Speed!

Why this hurrying throng? Are they seeking for variety in scenery or for strange, new towns? Each day's landscape is like that of the preceding day and each village is as like its neighbor as two peas. It is purely and simply for the exhilaration of swift motion that this seemingly aimlessly roving mass of humanity sets forth from home, leaving comfortable beds and porcelain tubs and gas stoves to take up the primitive conditions which living on the road in tents means.

Speed and yet more speed! Is the cry of mankind. There is but one further phase of this mania which is at the beginning of its career, aviation. When the sky is as full of flying machines as today the land is of automobiles then eventually will come that sense of satiety and of no more worlds to conquer which once drove—was it Alexander the Great or one of the Pharoahs?—to melancholy. What will become of the human race then?

To the would-be motorist seeking the shortest route to good roads and pretty country the writer earnestly recommends our nearby neighbor, Wisconsin, as a delectable country for such expeditions. Its roads, while by no means perfect, are in comparison with those of Illinois as a billiard table to a coal pile. Its landscape is soothing and delicious. Its inns, though not luxurious, are as a rule clean and run with a kindly intention, which is grateful at the end of a long day's run. In even the smaller towns we found bathrooms in abundance.

Roads Well Marked.

The chief feature of merit, however, to the adventurous pathfinder in Wisconsin is the careful indications as to the road to be found on almost every telegraph pole and at every corner. The routes from town to town are all distinctly numbered in black figures on white ground, and are further aided by big black arrows, also on white background, for the guidance of belated tourists overtaken by night. It is certainly a most satisfactory state from the wayfarer's point of view, and in marked contrast to our own rough roaded, neglected, slovenly Illinois.

There is a patch of highway in Illinois, between McHenry, Volo, and Waukegan, which I defy the wilds of Mongolia to equal for heartbreaking, destructive, rotten road bed. It would tear the insides out of an ox cart.

Besides being infinitely better in smoothness than our country roads, the Wisconsin highways are a third wider, some of them permitting four cars at a time to pass. "State and county trunk highways" they are called on the sign posts, and any commonwealth might be proud to own them. Nothing is more indicative of the character of a state than its highways. It is the most conspicuous badge of decent government. It is to a community what a man's clothes are, an index of self-respect, which goes more than half way in producing a favorable impression.

Wisconsin is a well shaven, neatly pressed and dressed commonwealth. In comparison, Illinois is unshorn, down at the heels, and out at the knees and elbows.

Same Old Sameness.

Wisconsin's two principal cities, Milwaukee and Madison, are such dapper smart looking towns that it is a pleasure to enter by their concrete streets under their drooping trees and explore their cozy residence districts. The Milwaukee Country club is a spick and span white building, set on a knoll, which overlooks the golf course in every direction. From its wide windows one can inspect the sunset and superintend the rising moon.

Of course, we Americans are such an utterly homogeneous race, or our so-called leisure class is, that Milwaukeeans look exactly like Chicagoans. If there is one aim and ambition common to all Americans it is to differ in absolutely no particular from every other American. This makes travel in the U. S. A. a monotonous business.

The same may be said of our towns and villages. There is the same sprinkling in them of bungalows, colonial mansions, Queen Anne cottages, Italian villas, and just honest to goodness contractors' houses wherever you go. The few remaining simple, unsophisticated, low browed homes that were built in the time of architectural innocence are the only really alluring residences to be seen along the route anywhere in this broad land of ours, and as fast as they can their owners are making them over and spoiling them.

A two days' run brought us to the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, on the Father of Waters, the Mississippi river. One has to travel to learn geography. No one—and we have had expensive teachers—ever told us that at this point in its tortuous way the Mississippi runs east and west, so we were quite unprepared to find those Minnesota twins sitting side by side, as it were, on the wobbly shore of this mysterous stream.

Granaries Like Elephants.

The inhabitants there are proud of their churches and public buildings. As a matter of fact, these are just like their kind in any new and prosperous western metropolis. Their most distinctive architectural features are the tall, cylindrical, gray granaries, which stand up above the surrounding landscape like herds of elephants huddling together for companionship and security.

They were interesting. They had made Minneapolis and St. Paul. They had made possible the charming clubs in town and country, the expensive residences of Pillsburys, Crosbys, Washburnes, Hills, Peaveys, Heffelfingers, et al.

The last mentioned name reminds me of a yearly event which recently took place and which included many Chicago men. Frank Heffelfinger, brother of the well known athlete of that name, makes it an annual practice to invite to his house just outside of Minneapolis twenty of his friends and former Harvard classmates, many of whom "hail from" Chicago. A fortnight ago a large delegation from this part of the world went up in a body for golf and a gay stag party. Among them were Scott Durand, Frank and Arthur Farwell, George A. McKinlock, Samuel T. Chase, Edward A. Russell, William P. Martin, and Samuel J. Walker.

They undoubtedly made the welkin ring as they swung their mashies over the course that meanders beside lovely Lake Minnetonka. Men always make a great deal of to-do over the extra good times they have when there are no women around. Is it a case of "Methinks they do protest too much"? The Chicago men all regard this annual visit as one of the high spots of the twelvemonth.

No Slums in Twin Cities.

One of the proud boasts of the citizens of the twin cities is that they have no slums. We traveled around the territory covered by the twins and never saw anything that looked like our idea of a slum. There were neighborhoods that looked less prosperous than others, but nothing that recalled some of the streets that one sees from the Northwestern railroad coming into Chicago from the north where row after row of tumbledown houses are set askew on treeless, dusty, ill-paved streets; districts where little children play in cinder piles and their mothers gossip over unemptied garbage cans.

Minnesotans claim to have 10,000 named lakes. This statement implies that they have a lot of others still unnamed. The state must closely resemble a much moth eaten piece of green cloth laid over a tub of slightly blued water. Besides Lake Minnetonka the twin cities are adorned by three other lakes, Lake Harriet, Calhoun lake, and —heavens, I've forgotten the name of the other one. Lovely parks rim these lakes, and on Sunday the entire population turns out to enjoy the beauties of nature as made accessible to them by the two municipalities. If I couldn't live in Chicago in that exciting region east of the North branch and go daily for a swim in that piece of water that bathes the foot of Bellevue place, I'd rather live in either St. Paul or Minneapolis than in any other city I know of west of the Alleghenies.

On the Banks of the Mississippi.

No one who hasn't motored from St. Paul down the western shore of the Mississippi to Winona and from there down the eastern bank to La Crosse has any idea of the beauty of the scenery of that region. Once the father of rivers probably filled to the brim the wide, verdant valley which lies between the densely wooded bluffs that bound the horizon. In those remote days pterodactyls, long of neck and web footed, skimmed the mighty flood, while the prehistoric mastodons and mammoths waded in the shallows.

Today the stream has shrunk and the bluffs are become high bosomed hills spreading in every direction in endless succession. A profound repose seemed to be the state of mind of the thickly green islands which the erratic wash of the most fickle and uncertain of rivers has created in midstream. In fact, this is the atmosphere of all that part of the Mississippi which we visited.

Only once was there any sign of traffic or life on the great inland waterway. Near Winona we saw a strange looking craft pushing with its nose a flat bottomed lighter, while what looked like white under petticoats at the rear were being indecently kicked about by its primitive stern paddle wheel. It was an archaic spectacle and emphasized more markedly the neglect of the river as a route for commerce than if there had been absolutely no boat to be seen.

We Enter Richland Center.

Everywhere we journeyed there were signs of prosperity and comfort. There was hardly a small town, no gopher prairie, without its country club and golf course. Main streets there were in a plenty, but none like Sinclair Lewis'. The high water mark of the deliciously, ideally bucolic was reached in a Wisconsin village, well named Richland Center. It lies or, rather, it sleeps in a broad, sunny, shallow valley, through which meanders a reed bordered, pellucid stream in which "contented cows" were standing sunk in exquisite stupor as we drove towards the village. The milk of these contented cows is famous the land over for its richness and flavor.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

We side stepped the much-advertised eating places whose names along the route had been nailed to trees, and betook ourselves to a little spick and span place kept by two Scotch women, where we had the most delicious repast of our whole trip; richly ripe tomatoes with a French dressing made with first grade salad oil, real lemon juice, and a delicate suspicion of onion; hot poached egg sandwiches; sliced peaches, and devil's food cake; coffee of a fragrance unequaled even at home, the peaches and coffee served with rich yellow cream from the most contented of the c. a.'s. Can you beat that anywhere as a midday meal on warm summer's day?

Highland Center needs a poet to sound its charm and send its name down to history. When will our restaurateurs learn that a few dishes concocted with art and served with chic are worth a long bill of fare of poorly cooked food? After luncheon we played bridge in the cool recesses of the teashop on an immaculate, white porcelain table such as manicures and dentists have in their offices, while our weary chauffeur dozed in the car. For at least an hour of life we were steeped in the sense of infinite repose which prevails in that unknown and lovely valley, and forgot the clamor and stress of life in Cook county.

The Wisconsites have a quaint custom of putting the name of the village at the entrance to them, and under it giving the number of the inhabitants. One place announced that it had 100 inhabitants. We counted forty-seven of them on the main village street as we drove through.

Had it been the middle of a dark night and we ourselves been blindfolded when we passed from Wisconsin into Illinois we should have known the minute of transition; the surface of the Illinois highway tore our vitals and shook all joy out of life, as well as loosening every nut in the automobile and dislocating its innermost organs. And so ended the excursion into neighboring commonwealths!

Bridge for Girl Scouts.

The big bridge party which Mrs. S. T. Chase is getting up for the afternoon of Sept. 1, at Villa Turicum, Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick's Lake Forest estate, is making great headway. She has already sold seventy-five of the 100 tables. The affair is intended to raise money to buy a permanent camp site for the Cook County Girl Scourts. So, as the women bid "a without," or double a spade make, they can have the added satisfaction of knowing that they are aiding all those eager young girls to have a suitable outlet for their spirits and energy in the well administered introduction to nature and an out of doors life which a fortnight in a Girl Scout camp ensures.

The organizers of the bridge fete have had some prizes offered them which will spur the players on to great endeavors. H. S. Frank is giving them a modish hat. Louis Swift has promised a fine ham, and George A. McKinlock will provide an electrical appliance of some kind to be striven for. As the date is still far off, the probabilities are that there will be many more desirable gifts to be distributed to the high scorers.

Mrs. Benjamin Carpenter is commissioner of the Cook County Girl Scouts, Mrs. Julius Rosenwald is honorary commissioner, and Mrs. Claire Moore is treasurer.

The Changing World.

A former Chicagoan, who was prominent here in the World's fair period, Mrs. Frank Remington, is visiting her cousin, Mrs. D. Mark Cummings, at Lake Forest. Mrs. Remington was Miss Maude Howard and a great belle and beauty in her time. Her first husband was the late George S. Willetts.

The Willettses lived in the house at the northeast corner of North Michigan avenue and Erie street. When it was built this house was considered the latest word in sophisticated architecture. Now it is used for business, and that whole neighborhood has so changed that Mrs. Remington will feel as if she were looking at a strange city, not the place of her birth and where she grew up. Chicagoans who come back after a long absence always profess themselves to be amazed at the swift alterations which take place here each decade.

Did you happen to read in this column about the chain letter now going about the country, a fearful thing started by an army officer to be sent around the earth three times, a formless, aimless bringer of trouble, which, with no redeeming verse to inspire or prayer to uplift, calls upon the luckless recipient to copy the list of names and the invocation to write to nine others urging each of them to write to still nine others, and so on, ad infinitum, with a threat that if one breaks the chain dire misfortune will befall him within nine days, otherwise some particular piece of good luck will come?

Such a chain letter came to the writer just on setting out on a motor tour of Wisconsin and Minneapolis. Two days later on the curve of a lonely road in the Badger state a hurrying flivver, badly driven, side swiped the eight cylinder car in which we were driving sedately along. Who do you think was the only one hurt of the five people in the large car and the three in the little one?

Saving Countless Millions.

My friends, it was the wretched recipient of that miserable letter which she had cast scornfully into the waste basket! Every one else came off scot free, while two of the ribs of that ill-fated one broke like matches. Of course, she knew why it happened, though she refrained from saying so.

Even this, however, did not make her repent breaking the chain. If she had weakly yielded to the threat, by this time thousands of busy mortals would be in the toils of that chain letter. Had she written to nine and her nine to nine others, that would have troubled eighty-one; had they carried on the fearsome work that would have destroyed the peace of mind of 729; had these still further cast the meshes over their wretched victims 6,561 human beings would be writhing in the coils of that chain letter. As I lie here in joyous martyrdom, I feel that as least I have saved countless millions from the danger of the "comether" cast by that baleful letter.

By the way, do you know the story of the little boy whose mother was instructing him in the Old Testament? She told him about Adam and the creation of Eva from one of his ribs. "But mother, didn't it hurt him awfully?" anxiously inquired the child.

"We are not told as to that," was her answer.

That night she heard him moaning after he had gone to bed. When she went to him and asked what was the matter, he replied: "O mother! I've a dreadful pain in my side; I think that I'm going to have a wife."

Old Circus Posters on Exhibit.

The Chicago Historical society rooms are especially well worth a visit these days because of an exhibit of old circus posters which will recall to the old timer the glorious days of P. T. Barnum, one of our national epoch makers. To the children and grandchildren of the O. T. the gathering of gaudy posters will be diverting as well as instructive because of the naïve pictures of Jumbo, the original bearded lady, and the divine Jenny Lind.

Barnum's greatest stunt was to bring over to this country the world's most famous singer, Jenny Lind, the Swedish nightingale. His next, in point of originality, was the importation and wide advertising of the world's biggest elephant, Jumbo. The mere word has ever since been the synonym for hugeness.

There is no more worth while and interesting place in Chicago for a holiday throng to get a good show for nothing than at the Chicago Historical society, housed in the brown stone building on the northwest corner of North Dearborn and West Ontario streets. The rooms are open through this month on Saturday afternoons, as well as the other days, so as to provide entertainment for summer crowds seeking recreation. Be sure to go there! It will well repay you.

ON SALE—DAYLIGHT BASEMENT

These two pigs are sisters from the same litter, and have had all they could eat of exactly the same foods, except that the larger one had milk included in its ration, while the smaller one had no milk. The milk-fed pig weighs nearly six times as much as the smaller one that has had no milk.

Notice the difference in bone construction and body development; the scrawny appearance and rough hair of the one that has had no milk as compared with the slick, smooth appearance and healthy condition of the one having had milk.

There is just as much difference in the nervous condition and disposition of these two pigs as there is in their physical appearance.

One-third of the children of the United States, like the smaller pig, are suffering from under-nourishment. The use of plenty of milk will largely remedy this. Every child should have at least a quart every day.

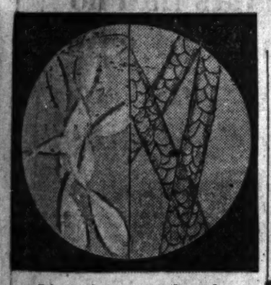
MICROSCOPY

DISTINGUISHING COTTON FROM WOOL.

COTTON and wool fiber look different in the microscope. Wool is an animal hair, and like all hairs is composed of a column of scales. Cotton is a vegetable fiber, hard and lustrous. It's strands occur as flat ribbons whose outer edges are thickened.



Fibers of cotton and wool.

This structure causes the strands to curl into the shape of a screw when teased. Sometimes the fibers in a suspected piece of cloth are heavily dyed. Coloring matter can be largely removed by boiling in alcohol or in chlorine water.

When wool and cotton fibers are viewed by polarized light, a most remarkable difference is seen. The wool seems dull and dead, but the cotton shines as though it radiated light.

SISTERS

By Guy Lee.

This life isn't marked by a great change of action;
Day in and day out it's the same old attraction;
We're born and we fiddle along till we leave it,
With hope, now and then, but small chance to achieve it.
Some fuss and run round in a circle, but never Get farther than those who betray less endeavor;
And the epitaph each lies beneath when the bubble
Has burst is, "Escaped from a world full of trouble."

Romance for a space lends a happy diversion;
She joins all too briefly the sorry excursion;
But her smile's a mirage, for with cynical snicker
She kids us a while and then fades with a flicker.
There are two things alone that are worth special mention;
There are two things alone that command prime attention;
And we seldom miss either—they mostly run double—
And one of them's love, and the other one's trouble.

Ravinia Opera Is Approaching End of Summer Season

MELVENA PASSMORE.

That American singers are to have a share in the coming season of the Chicago Civic Opera company is indicated by the list of recent engagements, which includes the name of Melvena Passmore, soprano. Reports from the Auditorium are to the effect that she is fluent and accomplished in both coloratura and lyric roles. She is a native of Houston, Tex.

RAVINIA swings into the final fortnight of what has been, all in all, its most important season. One is tempted to revive that obsolescent locution, sui generis, as a variant of unique, in talking of or writing about this breeze blown emprise in music; for, it may not be said too often, if we are devoted to the idea of perpetuating Ravinia, that nowhere else in all this ragged, jagged, fagged old world is there another place like it.

If you are fond of the retrospective view of your esthetic adventures, your mind must often return to the early nights of Mr. Eckstein's direction of Ravinia, with the tentative touching upon this opera and that of the old, set répertoire of the itinerants—Verdi and Donizetti, with "Faust" and "Fra Diavolo," always. "The Bohemian Girl," sometimes "Maritana," and generally "Martha." Looking back and comparing it with opera as given this summer, it seems naïve and primary enough, no doubt, but it classified as audacious management for the Ravinia which Mr. Eckstein and his associates took over, a wreck in all its aspects except nature's beneficence, in 1911.

To Much for Granted.

The 1922 season, so far as it is gone, gives the most persuasive of reasons why Ravinia should go on through 1923, 1924, and into the vista of the future beyond your time and my time and Mr. Eckstein's time. The route thither is being learned each year by increasing numbers. It is not within reason to regard Ravinia as something apart from Chicago: it is "north shore" simply in the geographical sense, and the factor of mileage is decreasingly important as the summers roll on. The summer season of opera is among the riches of Chicago which we are rather inclined to take for granted, as we take our Art institute, our great orchestra, our Auditorium opera, and, away from the field of art, our lake, our woods, and preserves, and all the things that serve to make life here a better matter than life anywhere else on earth.

There is small likelihood that the old importunity to "Save Ravinia!" will ever be recried; probably the final usage of the slogan was in B. L. T.'s lyric to be sung to the tune of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." It is not a case now of saving Ravinia but of preserving it. Sometimes we save things not worth saving, but Ravinia and its opera are not to be so catalogued. In other words, forget the old cry of "Save Ravinia!" and replace it with the slogan of our most recent war, "Let's go!" For, after all, going to Ravinia is the greatest preservative of Ravinia.

Requested Repetitions.

With "Zaza" returned, in last night's revival, to the ready répertoire, the ninth week is to be given over to repetitions, most of them, explains Mr. Eckstein, by more or less urgent request, and all of them representing an upsetting of the week's schedule as planned a month ahead. Thus, "Boris Godounoff" was marked for retirement for the summer after its second performance; "Le Chemineau" was to have been held for the final Sunday; "Manon," a hardy annual, was looked upon as done after the second time; and "L'Amore del Tre Re" was ticketed as a good opera for the final Saturday.

A feature of the week is that, beginning with last night's "Zaza," which is to be repeated a week from tonight, only one opera in eight belongs, in point of date, to what we call the "older répertoire." That one is "Romeo and Juliet." All the seven others—"Zaza," "The Secret of Suzanne," "La Navarraise," "Boris," "Le Chemineau," "Manon," and "L'Amore"—classify as contemporary works, and, outside of the two Massenet items, all have been brought to American hearing within the last twelve years. The répertoire grows slowly, but it grows.

Dux and Pareto in Concert.

The increased vogue of the Monday concerts, coupled with Claire Dux's notable success in her group of lieder last week, leads Mr. Eckstein to put two of his stars into tomorrow night's bill as soloists—Miss Dux, with more lieder, including some by Reger and Brahms, which she has not yet sung in this neighborhood, and Miss Pareto, who will distribute fioratura in the course of the program.

Changes in cast from earlier performances are few in the week's bills. Miss Mario sings Susanne tonight for the first time; Mr. Harrold returns on Thursday to the rôle of Des Grieux in "Manon," which he has not sung since 1919; and Miss Saroya will for the first time be the Flora in Friday's "L'Amore." These shifts are interesting in prospect, as changes involving good artists in definite rôles generally are.

The Week's Schedule.

In outline, the week's schedule is:

Today at 3:15—"Favorites" concert.

Tonight at 8:15—"The Secret of Suzanne," with Mario and Ballester, and "La Navarraise," with Gentle, Kingston, Rothier, et al.

Monday at 8:15—Artists' concert, with Dux and Pareto as soloists.

Tuesday at 8:15—"Boris Godounoff," with Didur, Gentle, Harrold, Roselle, Rothier, Falco, et al.

Wednesday at 8:15—"Le Chemineau," with Danise, Gentle, Rothier, Roselle, D'Angelo, Falco, Paltrinieri, et al.

Thursday at 3:15—Children's concert, with Mr. and Mrs. Oberndorfer in interpretation.

Thursday at 8:15—"Manon," with Dux, Harrold, Roselle, Rothier, Marr, Falco, et al.

Friday at 8:15—"L'Amore del Tre Re," with Saroya, Kingston, Danise, and Didur.

Saturday at 3:15—Popular concert.

Saturday at 8:15—"Romeo and Juliet," with Mario, Harrold, Roselle, Ballester, Rothier, et al.

Good Deeds in Civic Music.

Annual reports may or may not be interesting reading. Apart from those immediately affected, they frequently are not, dealing, as they do, with figures, finances, summaries, and schedules. The Civic Music association, however, sends out the ninth of its series, and its pages tell of what is almost a romantic adventure. I have yet to see the organization that does so much work with so little money. The phrase, multum in parvo, must almost have been invented for the association.

The children lead off in the report. Catching them young and putting them into choruses seems to have worked out unusually well. The children's choruses of one combination and another gave twenty-three concerts in small parks and schools, plus a special program of Christmas carols in the court of the Fine Arts building Dec. 22 and a spring festival at Orchestra hall April 19. In order to make these possible, rehearsals are necessary, and over 1,500 children meet twice a week from September to June for the purpose. In most cases these are children of the foreign born in Chicago, and the plan has developed into an effective means of breaking down racial barriers and developing Americanism.

Orchestra Greatest Achievement.

Add to these twenty-one free concerts by local musicians in the field houses of the civic centers, at Hamilton, Sherman, Ogden, and Palmer parks and Clarke school. Add further 127 "community sings" here and there about the city. Add again the Florence Nightingale chorus of student nurses from the Presbyterian Hospital Training school, with its rehearsals and one concert.

Then comes one of the greatest achievements of the association, the Civic Orchestra of Chicago, now three seasons old. Where is the civic orchestra in Chicago, inquired one of the promulgators of opera in English a few weeks ago? The question may have been taken to the rhetorical, but there is an answer. The civic orchestra is here.

Justifies Its Existence.

It was organized—I quote from the report—"First, to train young American musicians in the routine, ensemble, répertoire, and discipline of the symphony orchestra under actual symphonic conditions, thereby helping to reduce the dependence upon Europe as the source for trained symphony players; second, to make it possible for a greater number of Chicago's players to have the privilege of hearing orchestral music, particularly those who live in outlying districts of the city."

In both aims it has justified itself. Frederick Stock, conductor, and Eric De Lamarter and George Dasch, assistant conductors, held rehearsals for the young players four times a week during the season, and gave fourteen concerts, five in the public schools, eight at Orchestra hall, one before the N. E. A. superintendence division at the Auditorium. Vincent D'Indy, the French composer, heard the orchestra play some of his own music, conducted it personally, and was moved to make a congratulatory address.

Graduating Into Professionals.

It is one of the incidents of the report that Mr. Stock and Mr. De Lamarter served without compensation in this work; that the board of directors voted Mr. Stock a gift of $1,000 at Christmas time, and that he returned it with the suggestion that it be used as the nucleus of a fund to be called the "Civic Music Foundation for the Publication of American Compositions."

As to the actual training of the players, four members of this orchestra have been taken over by the Chicago Symphony orchestra for appointments the coming season. They are Domenico de Caprio, clarinet; Hugo Fox, bassoon; John Wessling, viola, and Carl Rink, violin, and they bring up the total to twelve who have thus graduated into professional positions.

The romantic part of the report comes at its end. All this work, and it is a big work, far more important than all the reams of propagandizing in the same period, was accomplished with an income of $32,459.05 and an outgo of $305.20 less than that amount. It seems almost incredible, but the facts stand. With twice as much money, the Civic Music association could have accomplished four times as much, no doubt. As it is, it is a remarkable achievement.

Engagements and Tours.

The Chicago band will continue throughout the month its policy of giving three open air concerts each week. As listed for the coming week, its engagements read: Tuesday night, Independence park; Wednesday night, Grant park; Thursday night, Holden park. Conductor William Weil dispenses diversified programs; a bit of the classics, a few excerpts from operas, grand and light, marches, and the latest ditties from the popular music firms.

Marie Sidenius Zendt has been engaged as soloist with Henry W. B. Barnes' chorus of 1,000 voices in the concert at Mooseheart Aug. 26. She will sing the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

Perhaps a new opera singer has arrived. From Roca di Papa, Italy, comes this brief but eloquent cablegram: "We have girl—Schipa." The most natural comment would be that the community is well named.

Pablo Casals, the cellist, now back at his home in Spain, will return to this country in December. His first appearance will be as soloist with the New York Symphony orchestra.

A Corset That Helps YOU
Third Floor—Dearborn Street

Every corset manufacturer designs his corset for a particular woman. If, as so often happens where the fitting service is indifferent, the customer is fitted to the wrong model, then when the inevitable trouble comes, she blames the corset.

It is our experience—and we fit more corsets than any other store in America—that when a corset does not give satisfaction, that it is as often the fitting service as the corset that is at fault.

For our fitting service, conceded superior to any in Chicago, and so immeasurably helpful to you, your modiste and your physician, no extra charge is made.

had felt in its author whenever you had seen a play of his or read it, an uncompromising league with fate, a beautiful inevitableness.

Eugene O'Neill was suddenly, in the eyes of the world, a great artist. Commercial production followed experimental success. His success justified one to the other—the experimental theater to the commercial stage, the traditional commercial methods to the workshop theorists. And then "Emperor Jones," with "Diffrent" and "The Straw," and "Gold." In six years Eugene O'Neill emerged—from being a student in Harvard and the author of an unknown group of one act plays to "the greatest living American dramatist."

And this year he was crowned with the Pulitzer prize for his "Anna Christie," that subtle, poignant thing was laurel wreathed for being "the American play which shall best represent the educational power and value of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste, and good manners." Many of us had a chance to see it when it was here. For those of us who didn't its appearance in book form is one of the compensations for the hours we spend digging in the muck of dull and ineffective books. Even more poignantly true than when it was presented does it appear. Even more, incidentally, do we realize that the last act might well have not been. But the American public yearns for the happy ending, and for once Mr. O'Neill gave it to them.

And besides, in the book is "The Hairy Ape," which has occupied so much space in the New York papers and magazines, its "indecencies, its vulgarities, its crudities" bewailed by those whose nostrils quiver at a whiff of the dankness of too common clay. Perhaps—I didn't see it performed—Louis Wolheim, who was the Hairy Ape in New York, put a peculiarly realistic vehemence into his curses. Perhaps his gaudy boastfulness assumed an indecency and vulgarity which are absent in the printed play. But certainly it is absent, except as all primeval things must of necessity be vulgar, in the printed play. I suspect those who cavilled belonged to the generation that thinks women's ears would go deaf if they heard a mule driver in the late unpleasantness, and that those who hear the name of the Lord taken in vain will be held guilty with those who take it so.

"The Hairy Ape" is the most powerful play Eugene O'Neill ever wrote. It concerns the almost instantaneous change of a great, boastful primeval creature who believes that his strength is a greater power than money or steam or coal; that everything and every one is subservient to the energy which is in his body to a moody, brooding "hairy ape" by the mere flashing presence of a girl, all luxury, all whiteness, who looks upon him in the stoke hole of a trans-Atlantic liner and cringes from him. It concerns the revilings of "the hairy ape," his searchings for revenge, his gropings to belong somewhere, and his final release in death when he opens the cage of a gorilla at the zoo and goes into the arms of his primeval ancestor.

The third play in the book, "The First Man," is not at all in Mr. O'Neill's customary manner. It is about the advent of an unwelcome child—unwelcome to its father, but passionately desired by its mother—and about a group of malicious and indecently suspicious relatives.

"Of Our City"—Edwin Balmer.

Chicago is in that insecure position intellectually when it has ceased being the big frog in the puddle of little cities and has not yet quite become the biggest frog in the puddle of the biggest cities. It is naïve, boastful, boyishly arrogant about many of its triumphs. It is—almost—civicly conscious. Its voice is not weak in the hosannahs of praise it raises to itself, in its business life.

EDWIN BALMER.

But intellectually it still has the little puddle complex. It likes to hear H. L. Mencken call it the literary capital of the United States, but it admits with a quick deprecation that H. L. Mencken is well known as a wag; that you can't always believe the fellow, and that maybe he's poking fun at us. It waits until its men and women have taken themselves to the eager arms of New York before it reads their books or sees their plays or quotes their poetry. It always has a little shock when it finds itself the scene of a novel or a play or a verse. And it usually waits to see what the big puddle thinks about the fact before it gets proud of home talent.

In a word, it has grown out of the period when it thinks little Emma, the minister's daughter playing variations on "The Battle of Prague," is the world's greatest pianist, but it is still in the stage when Jamesie, the son of the village carpenter, can't be a great artist because, well, we've known Jamesie Tucker ever since he was a little tad and he's always been a-drawin' pitchers. You can't tell us Jamesie's growed up to be a artist. We know that Tucker blood.

All of which doesn't mean anything more than that I've finished a Chicago novel by a Chicagoan, which is frankly a thriller, nothing more, which doesn't pretend to be great literature, but which does have a background of the loop and Evanston and Wilson avenue and the lake and Streeterville, and which, if it had been written by a St. Louisan, for instance, would have been bought by half the reading populace of St. Louis just because it was about home and by home talent, but which will probably be eyed askance by Chicago readers just because it is about home and by home talent. We are suspicious of books about Chicago or by Chicagoans. We'll never admit that our Sherwood Andersons and our Henry Blake Fullers and our Theodore Dresiers and our Carl Sandburgs and our Edna Ferbers are artists in their way; no, nor that our Henry Kitchell Websters can write as good magazine yarns as any of 'em, nor that our Edwin Balmers can do a social thriller if they want to.

For the sort of story it is, Edwin Balmer has written as good a thriller as any. It lives up to its title every minute. It is the story of the difference that came in a breath—with the breath of scandal—to Marjorie Hale, the adoring daughter of a rising financial figure—the kind of father that grows in hundreds in Chicago's business big puddleness, the adored fiancée of another potential rising financial figure. One hour she is merely a daughter and a fiancée, the next she knows of things which none of them had thought could ever touch her. With the accidental news of an accident to her father and her insistence that she be taken to him, she is in the apartment of the woman with whom he has been on terms unknown in the pleasant pages of her Evanston phrase book, she is a conspirator with an unscrupulous lawyer to "hush it up," she is torn by the questions of morality which confront her. That she answers them melodramatically proves, as we said, that the story lives up to its title.

Telling the Amateur How to Produce.

And speaking of plays—statistics. Four hundred colleges and schools are actively engaged in producing plays. The number of drama clubs and women's clubs who regularly put on plays has never been computed. We all know how many there are in our own little circles. If the world feels that it must see itself acting, may we humbly recommend "Producing in Little Theaters," by Clarence Stratton? It tells the amateur how to do his producing in the most artistic manner possible. It suggests methods, for instance, by which the amateur Duses and Coquelins may be tactfully handled! A valuable appendix contains a list of one hundred full length and one hundred one act plays which are suitable for amateur performance, and describes each one of them—in itself worth the price of the book to a potential producer.

And speaking of amateur performances, there is an amusing light on the state of the world in the fact that a Japanese scholar has asked permission to translate Kenneth MacGowan's "The Theater of Tomorrow" for this purpose: "to help our radical young people who are certainly struggling, looking for a way out of their too much classical, already molded theatrical art." Somehow we have got in the habit of thinking that all of the social radicalism of the youth of the world is confined to the characters in French and English novels. We never look for a group of yearners in Japan.

At the Moment of Death.

"At the Moment of Death" is the second volume of "Death and Its Mystery," that series with which Camille Flammarion shook France a year or so ago. It consists of three parts, "Before Death: Proofs of the Existence of the Soul," which has already been translated, this one, and "After Death: The Manifestations and Apparitions of the Dead; the Soul After Death," which has not yet come to readers who must have their French anglicized. Whatever the other two volumes are, this one is just plain fascinating. It is more like a physician's case book or a scientist's notebook of experiments than it is like a treatise on the subject. It is full of letters from readers who give their experiences with the phenomena of death and of cases of premonitions and apparitions personally investigated by M. Flammarion, who is too well known as a scientist to be labeled a mere spiritualistic zealot.

In different chapters it deals with such intriguing ideas as the presence of an astral body beside or near the physical body—as actually seen by groups of witnesses—phenomena which could not be accounted for by group hallucination, the apparitions of the dying some time before death—tales we have all heard of relatives or friends appearing in a dream or in actuality when they were countless miles away, of other manifestations of the dying, like slamming doors and dropping clocks, the visioning of death scenes sometimes years before they happen, various warnings which precede or announce death, mental impressions of deaths which friends have at a distance, not actual pictures, but just a sense of death, those eerie moments between life and death when the dying person is said to have a peculiar strength to make himself evident to the living, and the actual apparitions of the dying.

M. Flammarion doesn't explain them. He catalogues them. One day they will be explained, he says. Treated thus, the subject is a scientific one, a fascinating one, and not in any sense a religious or a spiritual one.

Madame de Stael.

The brother of Sir Rider Haggard, Andrew C. P. Haggard, has written a creditably long biography of Madame de Stael, the lady who is listed in the biographical dictionary as "the great writer," but who has come down to us more as herself than as the author of creative work of vast importance. It is her personality and her social career, her passionate alliances with the great, and her quarrels with them—Napoleon's constant enmity toward her—that keep her name alive, not her "Delphine" nor "Corinne" nor "D'Allemande," nor any other of her literary efforts. It is with her "Trials and Triumphs" more than with her literary successes that Mr. Haggard has to do, especially with her amatory conquests.

A Literary Magazine for the Masses.

E. Haldeman-Julius, the Mr. part of the authors of "Dust," Mr. and Mrs. Haldeman-Julius, is going to publish a monthly magazine called "Life and Letters," which he proposes to sell for 25 cents a year—on the theory that more would read good magazines if they were not so expensive.

The Haldeman-Juliuses have an automatic printing plant in Girard, Kas., which makes it possible for them to do things exceedingly cheaply. You know, perhaps, of his 10 cent pocket series. Over 10,000,000 copies of them have been sold.

Mr. Haldeman-Julius is, according to an article by Charles Finger in this month's "All's Well," the original human dynamo. When he isn't running this really huge publishing business he and his pretty little wife are writing stories for the Atlantic or working on another novel. I was just reading a review of "Dust" in the Manchester Guardian—a review which praised the book with what, for the Guardian, is real enthusiasm. The Haldeman-Juliuses are radicals of the most helpful kind—their radicalism takes the form of trying with all of their power to make books and reading the heritage of the many instead of the few.

BEST SELLERS OF THE AGES

much in so little a while. To get an epochal work in three hours and under the most vivid and pulsing conditions! That is expeditious culture.

"A Doll's House" is worth our enjoying for two reasons: First, because it is a most interesting, significant, suggestive, provocative document in the history of human progress; second, because its climb from the valley of opprobrium to the serene heights of world literature is one of the most curious and poignant illustrations in dramatic and literary history of the fact that this is a fallible world and, happily, prone to change its mind. In the lives of men and women now in their early fifties that climb is an outstanding fact in their lives—a fact that if they will weigh it—and love it—shall teach them that their half century has not been spent in a stagnant world, but in a world that has been thinking, and so revolutionizing, to some purpose about the hardest problems there are—the problems of every day and of every life. Nothing so brings this stalwart fact home to us of 50 years and thereabouts as reference to the stormy—nay, the insensate—vituperation which greeted "A Doll's House" when it was first viewed by an angry world. The language was incredible—or rather it seems incredible now, for when it was uttered it was by most "God-fearing" folk considered highly salubrious, and as safeguarding "the home" and "our pure-minded youth" and "the stage as a source of innocent diversion," and such like apparently helpless persons and sacred institutions. As a matter of fact that language was fouler and its innuendoes nastier than any language which honest, valiant, plain living, hard working Henrik Ibsen ever dreamed of putting into the mouths of any of his characters.

That was in 1879, and we were nine or ten years old. I suppose that more than a decade passed before we were able to take any intelligent interest in "A Doll's House." That would be along in the early '90s. The flow of violent language still was copious, but it was losing its effect, as violent language always does. In England Clement Scott was the principal source of the torrent and in this country William Winter. Clement Scott called Ibsen—in one of the most powerful and then most widely read of English newspapers—"a crazy, cranky being, who has derived his knowledge of life from some half-civilized Norwegian village." As a matter of fact, there are no half-civilized Norwegian villages. From Kristiansand to the area of the midnight sun all is in order, cleanly, thrifty, and—educationally—compulsory. In the Norwegian town of Bergen, where Ibsen did his early work as dramatist and manager, which now has a population of less than 80,000 and was in his time much smaller, I have stood before a sturdy old frame building—and the only reason I did not stand uncovered was because I did not wish to seem lunatic—which was once the municipal theater of Bergen and in which Ole Bull once led the orchestra and Ibsen and Bjornson were stage directors, and Edvard Grieg, who was one day to write the great "Peer Gynt" suite for Ibsen, was composer of incidental music. That is how "half-civilized" that little Norwegian seaport was seventy odd years ago. Today it has a municipal theater almost as pretentious as any playhouse in Chicago.

And, Mr. Winter! So lately as the beginning of this century he was esteemed to be doing the Lord's work in our country by his ravings against Ibsen and all his works. His majestic volumes called "The Wallet of Time" contain much instructive and eloquent record of the drama and the art of acting as both flourished in his long time, but today I cannot read without pity the grand old man's lengthy chapter on Ibsen, for, truly as I revered William Winter, I can see now that every line of it is false, facetious—and not funny. Of "A Doll's House" my old mentor said that it was neither a stage play nor a closet play, that it was "slow and tiresome when acted and trivial when read." One of his adjectives is "paltry." He said that the tarantella—the episode on which the second act draws to a close—was "the one moment of dramatic action that illumines the piece." The truth is that the tarantella was Ibsen's last concession to the old technique of the drama and that it is not a wise concession. Duse so fully realized this that she used to omit it.

A new time came.

The play that was "tiresome when acted and trivial when read" became a clarion. Women began to understand—even the school of "pure minded" women to whom naught is so impure as essential truth began to understand—that in Ibsen they had found a champion as grave and sincere as he was eloquent, and the men began to be ashamed of Torvald Helmer and of those "protecting" arms of his that protected just so long as they could embrace a perfectly slavish, physically desirable, and domestically agreeable and docile human body dignified with the name of wife. When the new time came the Scotts and the Winters found foemen not so virulent as they were, but their superiors in vigor and vehemence. They had disgusted men of letters like Sydney Grundy, who was no Ibsen partisan, but who said, "I do not even like Ibsen, but when I see a little boy scratching rude words on the pedestal of a Colossus I cannot help boxing his ears." They heard men of such probity and such acumen as George Bernard Shaw proclaiming Nora's revolt as "the end of a chapter in human history," and they lived to see "A Doll's House" recorded by sober chroniclers as "the play with which Ibsen conquered the world." And at last the time came—it was about halfway through the first decade of this century—when Haldane Macfall dryly remarked, "It is necessary neither to worship nor to abuse Ibsen, but it is impossible to ignore him." A world that had changed its mind nodded acquiescence.

The Scotts and the Winters, despairing of the world in general and of the stage in especial, descended into their quiet graves and the world fleetingly adjudicated on the good they had done and the mischief they had made, and went its tollsome, errant way towards the peaks that beckon.

Nora Helmer, whose story is simple but whose problem was not, and whose celebrated revolt now seems a temperate and reasoned assertion of human dignity, remains a radiant figure. She was first made known on the English stage in 1884 by an amazingly distorted, stultified, "popularized" version of Ibsen's play by Henry Arthur Jones, who named his contraption "The Breaking of a Butterfly." The very title was a denial of Ibsen's meaning. Nora, in his meaning, was not broken; she was made. Nor, in his meaning, is the tragedy of the play—if it is a tragedy—Nora's tragedy; it is Torvald Helmer's. She has come into her clear self-realization; it is her husband who still is groping. Mrs. Fiske caught that note incomparably, and across the years—it must be twenty—I still can hear and still can thrill to that vibrant tone, mingled of serenity and exaltation, with which she uttered, in the last act, the words, "I never felt so clear and certain about things as I feel tonight."

Nor is the sound of the slamming door on which the play ends a sound of doom. If the auditor hears it as such he has missed the whole point of the play. It is not the climax of a vulgar domestic disturbance. It is a note of liberation—but not in the trivial sense that Nora now is free to go her way. She is free only in the sense that she is free to take up the difficult but glorious task of self-realization, the task of developing by discipline her individuality. It is because the sound on which the curtain falls is so significant that a somewhat flamboyant sentence about it came to have almost the currency of a proverb. That sentence was: "The slamming of that door was heard across the roof of Europe." Mr. Shaw caught up the phrase and thus expanded it: "The slam of the door behind her is more momentous than the cannon of Waterloo or Sedan, because when she comes back it will not be to the old home."

Nora had lived resigned—resigned without knowing it—to being something that was taken for granted. As the result of a bitter trial and a cruel but salutary disillusion, she wakes to independent consciousness and activity. She had, long before the curtain rises on her story, been suddenly called upon to exercise moral judgment, and, as a consequence of defective training, she had not been able to exercise such judgment. She could only serve. That service was valiant but terribly mistaken. The mistake grew out of the benighted pampering and befuddling which had environed her as daughter and as wife. The essential tragedy of the play is Torvald's, because he has to make the atonement for a system which had reduced Nora to "his little lark." His little concubine without a soul of her own, he might have said if he had been capable of looking facts in the face.

It is because, by all the traditions of his sex and all the traditions of the marriage institution, he was not thus capable, that Nora's nonsurrender in the last act becomes so necessary and so grand. Had she surrendered, had she taken the easiest way, it is perfectly apparent what the next eight, or eighteen, or eight and twenty, years of that marriage would have been. Then indeed would she have been concubine.

Ibsen summed it all up once in one of his superb apothegms:

There is something better worth having than a clever head, and that is a whole soul.

ART AND ARTISTS

"Bel Esprit" to Assure Artists Leisure to Create

By Eleanor Jewett.

DURING this season of the year, when Americans abroad are almost as numerous as Americans at home, a story written from Sienna by a Chicago artist, Nancy Cox-McCormack, who is at present carving marble in Rome, where she expects to remain next winter, cannot fail to carry interest. The story concerns the "Bel Esprit," the last idea of Ezra Pound (another Chicago artist) before leaving Paris.

Possibly the deepest note in Mr. Pound's idea is struck by this sentence found in an article from his pen: "The only thing one can give an artist is leisure in which to work. To give an artist leisure is actually to take part in his creation."

A group of Americans abroad, and of Frenchmen, are using this thought as the basis for action in "Bel Esprit." "Bel Esprit" is not a charity. It is a question of making free men in the only sense that that word is worth while. It proposes simply to release more energy for invention and design.

The action of the society is strictly realistic. It recognizes an individual need and an individual qualification.

The first choice made by this group of French and Americans fell on T. S. Eliot, an American, some of whose work has already appeared in Paris in French. Members of "Bel Esprit" consider Eliot's employment in a bank the worst waste in contemporary literature. During his recent three months' absence, due to complete physical breakdown, he produced an important sequence of poems, one of the few things in contemporary literature to which one can ascribe permanent value. Why, when he can write like this, should his marvelous talent be confined by other tasks?

"Bel Esprit" wishes and intends to release such men from the thoughts of immediate necessity. First, the man is found; second, he is guaranteed food and leisure by a coöperation of subscribers (individuals or groups) pledging themselves to give $25 to $50 per year for life, or for as long as the artist needs it.

Will Americans at home support this movement? So wonders Nancy Cox-McCormack, our Chicago sculptor, who writes of it. Those who are interested may address "Bel Esprit, Sanctuaire, 20 Rue Jacob, Paris."

During these weeks, and perhaps particularly during the month of August, numbers of strangers visit us. To them the Art institute extends a special welcome. A feature in the circulation of knowledge concerning art is the institute's extensive collection of postcards picturing the most famous of its treasures. Among the subjects found are "Ice-Bound," by Metcalf; "The Fountain," by Sargent; "In the Studio," by Whistler; "Home of the Heron," by Inness; "Alice," by Chase, "The Song of the Lark," by Breton, and "The Bathers," by Bouguereau.

"Milady," by Louis Betts, is one of the most charming portraits this artist, formerly of Chicago, has ever painted. It hangs in the east gallery of the Art institute, making a pleasant spot for the eye to fall on in a leisurely stroll through the summer exhibits now on view there.

Another distinctive feature in the dissemination of art by the museum is seen in the collection of color prints shown by the institute in the farther end of the east gallery on the second floor. The remarkable veracity with which the colors of the original paintings have been ruproduced in incidence after incidence is nothing short of marvelous. Two special large color prints are now ready—"Joan of Arc," by Monvel, and "Geese at Play," by Zittau. Even if one does not care to carry home a picture as a souvenir of a Chicago holiday, still this exhibit is worth a visit.

The Chicago Academy of Fine Arts, of which Carl N. Werntz is director, has just published a most amusing account of its successful students. It is the kind of account which might well be copied by other schools and by art clubs, too. It consists of a miniature example of each artist's work, his name, and below a brief synopsis of his career. Among the artists mentioned are Frederic M. Grant, Glenn Mitchell, John Morton, Eugene Savage, Carey Orr, and Frank King, creator of the well loved Skeezix in "Gasoline Alley."

The fourth annual exhibition of oil paintings by Illinois artists is announced for November by the Peoria Society of Allied Art. Peoria is one of our smaller towns which has a growing sense of the value of good art. Their yearly exhibits are becoming among those things to which one looks forward.

Among those exhibiting at the Pageant of Progress art exhibit is Helen West Heller, who has a large and satisfying canvas on view.

Ezra Winter, who, while a student at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts, won the Prize of Rome, and afterwards studied at the American academy at Rome, has been appointed assistant professor of painting at Yale. His mural decorations for a New York building make an exceedingly striking series.

The Misses Margaret Fellegi, Margaret Dunne, and Corinne Anderson, who completed their course in dress design under Ralph Moni at the Academy of Fine Arts last month, have opened a tiny shop for the summer at Lake Geneva. They call it, appropriately enough, the "Handy Vanity Shop."

An interesting departure undertaken by the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and one that might well be duplicated with the Chicago Art institute, is the encouraging of finer work in photography by high school boys. The camera clubs meet at the museum to study the paintings, sculpture, and other exhibits, and then are allowed to make studies of such things as fall within their scope. Other material is permitted by the museum to be taken to the school, where, in class practice, the best effects of it are worked for. This, of course, is applied practically to still life study. Next year the work is to be carried on even more extensively.

The dry point etching made by Pierre Nuyttens of President Harding was purchased recently by Mrs. Spencer Penrose.

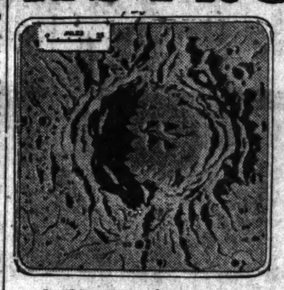
Aurora is about to open its Central States fair and exposition. A feature of it, illustrating, too, the greater activity in art taken now by the smaller towns, is the excellent collection of 150 paintings to be placed on view. The paintings were passed upon by a competent jury and stand for the best in modern American art.

The first annual exhibition of the Art-in-Trade club, an organization of interior decorators, designers, and manufacturers of home furnishings in New York City, will be open to the public on Saturday, Sept. 23, on the top floor of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel.

The Chicago Historical society has become possessed of a remarkable treasure in a rare Lincoln picture with an unusual history. For fifty years this portrait study lay unnoticed in a family storeroom. By chance it was unearthed, and the historical society is that much the richer in its famous collection.

The painting is by G. P. A. Healy, an artist well known in civil war times, and shows Lincoln listening to Gen. Sherman's recital of his march, which, just the day before, had terminated at Goldsboro, N. C. This is believed to be the last picture ever made of President Lincoln. It shows him as he looked seventeen days before he was shot.

ASTRONOMY



Looking into a lunar crater.

THE LUNAR PARADOX.

By S. F. Maxwell.

THERE is no water on the moon. The mountains there are as dry as powder. They are desiccated far beyond the extremes of the most parched of earthly deserts. On this globe there is always a little water to be found, even in the most baked and unpromising spots. Only a few drops, perhaps, but water. On the moon there is not even one drop.

Craters are rimmed with ash heaps piled high with scoria and plugged with lava. Down these precipicelike slopes no rivulet ever coursed its way. No muddy rain ever descended to beat drop marks on their slopes. And yet the motive power of every one of these volcanoes was steam. Such a combination on earth would be a paradox. On the moon the explanation is simplicity itself.

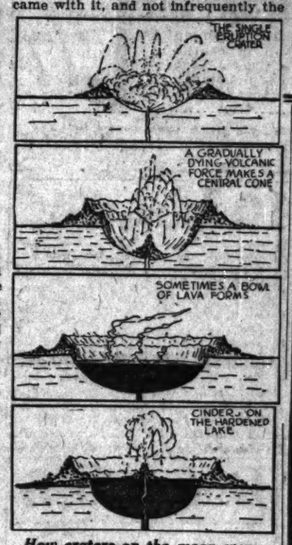
The moon is a smaller globe than the earth. Its gravity is only one-sixth of that of ours. As a consequence the atmospheric pressure normal to the moon is far too low to condense water. Steam issuing from a vent remains steam. The internal forces of the steam's molecules are greater than the attractive force of the moon. Steam flew away as it emerged, leaving the moon arid and waterless.

Water is a natural constituent of all plutonic rock. It occurs in some stones is a chemical constituent; in others it is merely mechanically imprisoned.

The moon was once molten. Hundreds of thousands of volcanic craters on its surface speak of a period of terrifically violent igneous action. As the globe of the moon cooled it formed a hard, unyielding, superficial crust above, imprisoning hotter and more molten magmas beneath. Now lavas contract as they cool. They grow heavier and denser and tend to sink. The moon's crust, in sinking, exerted heavy pressure on the lava beneath.

Pressure, you remember, is transmitted equally in all directions through a liquid, and weighs equally upon all the solubles dissolved in it. Have you ever noticed how soda water fizzes and bubbles as it comes from the fountain tap, due to the sudden easing of pressure and the immediate liberation of carbonic acid gas in it?

Precisely the same thing happened on the moon. Cracks occurred at weak places in the crust. The steam within, imprisoned under many tons of pressure, blew out with explosive violence, producing volcanoes and circle mountains. Sometimes only steam issued from the vent. In other places lava came with it, and not infrequently the volcano had two or more periods of eruption, after the fashion of terrestrial craters, before the pressure inside was equalized and action departed.



How craters on the moon were formed.

Women the World Over

Dr. Edith Mittel, recently made an interne at the Flushing, N. Y., hospital, is the first woman to hold such a position in New York City.

Though she is only 17 years of age, Miss Thelma L. Harrell of Savannah, Ga., is entitled to practice law before the state courts.

Mrs. Mary Emery of Cincinnati, O., will spend $5,000,000 building a model city to be controlled and directed in the interests of its residents.

Mrs. Harriet de Kraftt Woods, superintendent of the Library of Congress, started work as a clerk in the library and gradually worked her way up to her present post.

Mrs. Alexander Grosse, a fellow of the Royal Geographic society, has just returned to England from an expedition into the interior of Brazil, where she discovered what she believes to be a radium mine.

Miss Edith Stillwell, recently appointed condemnation commissioner in New York, is the first woman to hold such a position in that state.

Gideons Promote Celebration of Bible Revision

By the Rev. W. B. Norton

THE Gideons, otherwise known as the Christian Commercial Travelers' association, whose national headquarters are in the Marquette building, Chicago, are taking an active part in promoting the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the work of the American Bible Revision committee, which will be held throughout the United States on Sunday, Oct. 1. An American Bible celebration committee has been formed, with Graham Patterson, New York, publisher of the Christian Herald, as chairman, and the Gideons will cooperate with this committee. The Gideons have sent an open letter to all the churches urging the celebration.

The Gideons have distributed 500,000 Bibles in the hotels of America, and they hope the celebration will bring sufficient funds to make possible a further distribution of Bibles. The American revision committee worked at its task for years without remuneration and without even public recognition, suffering in addition much sharp criticism from those who did not approve a revision of the standard text of the Bible. Public sentiment has changed, and it is proposed that the service of the committee shall be recognized in the celebration.

The Gideon appeal came from A. B. Moore, national secretary.

THE REV. C. T. HOLMAN.

The Rev. C. T. Holman, pastor of the Normal Park Baptist church, 70th street and Stewart avenue, will celebrate today the fifteenth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry. He will preach on the subject, "The Greatest Work in the World."

The Rev. Mr. Holman has been pastor of the Normal Park church four years; has received into the membership of the church in this period 277, and has seen the financial budget of the church doubled. He is president of the Chicago Baptist Ministers' conference, which meets weekly at Baptist headquarters, 125 North Wabash avenue. He was chairman of the program committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which held its convention with an attendance of 9,000 at St. Paul, Minn., in July.

Carnivals are now being held in various Catholic parishes. At St. Veronica's, 3300 North Whipple street, and at St. Angela's, Potomac and Menard avenues, the carnivals began last evening and will continue throughout this week. The Rev. George C. Code is pastor of St. Vernoica's and the Rev. Joseph Fitzgerald is pastor of St. Angela's. Change of entertainment for each evening is promised. At All Saints', 25th place and Wallace street, the Rev. J. C. Gillan, LL. D., pastor, the carnival which began last evening will continue for two weeks. A fourteen piece band will furnish music every evening. The proceeds will be for St. Mary's of the Lake seminary, Area, Ill.

An outdoor festival beginning next Wednesday and continuing until Sept. 2 will be given under the auspices of St. Leo's parish, 79th and South Peoria streets, for the payment of property recently purchased by the parish. The Rev. P. F. Shewbridge, the pastor, is directing the plans for the festival.

A homecoming lawn fete will be given on the grounds of St. Patrick's academy, Park avenue, next Saturday afternoon and evening.

Albert Vail, editor of the Star of the West, the official magazine of the Bahai movement, which is erecting a temple at Wilmette, has returned from a conference of the executive board at Green Acre, Beloit, Wis., and will speak today at 3:30 p. m. in St. John's hall, the Masonic Temple building, on the subject, "The Ideals of the Bahai Temple."

The Catholic church at Irish Grove, Ill., will celebrate today its 80th anniversary. A dinner will be served on the lawn adjoining the church. The St. Philip Neri choir of Chicago, formerly Father Finn's world famed Paulist choristers, under the direction of George Horace Anderson, will accompany the mass.

Twenty-two courses in religious education will be offered at the school of religious education which begins its sessions tomorrow at Evanston in connection with Northwestern university. The school will continue until Aug. 31.

Schaefer, Hammond, Ind., will speak this morning and the children will sing. In the afternoon the children will drill and a sermon in English will be preached by the Rev. F. W. Schroeder, Chicago. The attendance on former occasions has been 3,000, and a similar number is expected today.

The central conference of the German speaking Baptists, which has been in session since last Thursday evening at the Oak Park German Baptist church, Harlem avenue and Dixon street, will adjourn tomorrow evening. Many of the delegates will leave following adjournment for St. Paul, Minn., where the general conference will begin Tuesday evening. Today the Rev. P. C. A. Menard, Cincinnati, will preach at 10:30. At 3 a young people's rally will be addressed by the Rev. T. W. Dons and H. P. Donner. At 8 p. m. the Rev. A. C. Lang will preach. He succeeds in office and as pastor of St. Mary's the Rev. Edward J. Mullaly, C.S.P. Father Cartwright come to Chicago after three years of service as pastor of St. Mary's, San Francisco, where, it is said, he met downtown conditions similar to those which will confront him in Chicago. Previous pastorates were in Portland, Ore., and in New York City. His brother, the Rev. R. S. Cartwright, C.S.P., has served at St. Mary's for many years.

The national convention of Congregational workers among colored people will be held from Wednesday to Sunday next in the Lincoln Memorial church, 65th street and Champlain avenue. The Rev. C. W. Burton is pastor. The first session will be at 2 p. m. Wednesday. Speakers will be present from Canada, Washington, D. Burton, secretary of the national council, and other ministers among the whites, will speak, as well as the leaders among the colored people. The president of the convention is Prof. N. B. Young, Tallahassee, Fla.

Herrin, Girard, and Staunton, Ill., were commended in reports as having maintained this season banner daily vacation Bible schools. Herrin is where the worst mine troubles occurred.

MAN

ORIGIN OF THE INDIANS.

LEAVING aside for the present the tooth of the Nebraska "apeman," no trace of human beings other than homo sapiens has ever been found in America. A million years ago the "promises of men" lived in Africa, in Malaysia, in Asia itself, and even in Europe. We see dim remains of a whole troop of extinct humans behind the horizon of the present, the short upstanding Java Pithecanthropus, a man in body but an ape in head; the African ape man, tall, erect and dark skinned, but with no forehead; the heavy jawed Heidelberg man, a creature whose children had mouths as big as those of large adults of today; the dog faced Piltdowns, and squat, stoop shouldered Neanderthals, who bobbed along on the outside of their feet, peering with timid, furtive eyes from beneath their shaggy brows.

None of these men ever saw America. Our continent was devoid of human habitation until the middle of the ice age. Man came into America only yesterday, in a geological sense. He appeared here 50,000 or 60,000 years ago at most. And the surprising fact still remains that he was the American Indian, everywhere from Patagonia to Alaska when he did come.

There are different kinds of Indians. Some have round heads, some have long heads; there are Indians with wide cheeks and there are Indians with narrow faces. Yet the more the evidence is studied, the stronger is the conviction borne in upon the minds of scientists that Indians are derived from one common parent family.

Where did they come from? A glance at the shores of Asia opposite us reveals Mongols. A bridge with Asia in the past there certainly was; civilization on both sides are much the same, but now the people are different. Culturally the northeastern Indians are more related to European white men of the ice age than to the rest of America. The land bridge of Atalantis may have been above water when the first tribes of Indians reached America.

The answer to this riddle lies in Asia. Indians are Asiatics, but in most of their former homes they have been submerged by the yellow men whom we call Mongols. Historians will record that the 40,000 years centering about the twentieth century A. D. saw the rise of two rival races of men, who totally eclipsed and outdistanced all other races, the white Aryan and the yellow Mongol.

We know how our race has grown. The strides of the Mongols are even greater. They are now spreading with much rapidity; they have either crowded out or absorbed the native peoples over most of eastern Asia. They are even in America as Eskimos. Mongol blood is thirsty; it drinks up the blood of other races with whom it intermarries, leaving only slant eyes, flat faces and high heads.

The Eskimos are much later comers to our shores than the Indians. They arrived here only a few score centuries ago. They are still coming. The whole ocean littoral from Greenland to British Colombia knows them.

Men of unmistakable Indian cast have been found in out of the way valleys of Siberia, in Formosa, in the Philippines, and even in Sumatra. There was a time when eastern Asia was inhabited by the prototypes of American Indians.

Mongols came down from the highlands of Tibet, and have all but eradicated their breed. They would have followed them to America but for the rapid sinking of Bering strait, which separated the two continents and made the migration wait for the invention of means of navigation.

Guard Your Baby's Health
Watch His Weight!

Every mother knows that the summertime is the most critical period of a baby's existence. In the trying heat, a sick baby will lose ground rapidly. The most careful watching is necessary to note the first change in its condition.

Fairbanks Baby Scale

No wise mother of a small baby should attempt to go through the summer without an absolutely reliable baby scale. There is no more dependable one made than the Fairbanks Baby Scale, registering accurately a change in the baby's weight as little as a quarter of an ounce. It is a safeguard which you do not want to be without. Beautifully finished in white enamel; absolutely sanitary; equipped with a large, convenient scoop; easily convertible into a household scale when no longer needed as a baby scale.

Fairbanks Health Scale

Should be in every bathroom as a safeguard of health, to indicate whether your children are properly nourished, to aid in reducing or building your own weight. Fairbanks Scales (Fairbanks, Morse & Co., Chicago) are unfailingly reliable; compact; attractive. Stands flat against wall or occupies any convenient corner.

Visit our interesting new department where an experienced trained nurse will give you tables of correct weights for all ages.

—a master key to all fields of business

The person who learns shorthand holds a master key to all fields of business. No office of any kind can get along without a stenographer. Dentist, clothing merchant, hotel-keeper or banker, all find a stenographer indispensable.

For twenty-six years Gregg School has been trying to meet the demand for Gregg-trained stenographers and secretaries; but it can't be done! Because business men think so highly of the thoroughness of Gregg training we always have more requests for our graduates than we have graduates to fill the positions. Up to Specifications.

A teacher was reviewing her class on a lesson she had given them on modern inventions.

"Who can mention one important thing we have now that we did not have 100 years ago?" she asked.

Tommy raised his hand.

"All right, Tom," the teacher answered, "what is it?"

"Me," said Tommy. V. K.

More Sinned Against.

Mrs. James is a pious person and serenely conscious of it.

It was, therefore, surprising to see her accost the minister in a perturbed manner after service, and say in her highly pitched voice, "Brother Cox, there is something causing me considerable worry and remorse, so I have come to you for help."

Solicitously, Brother Cox offered to see Mrs. James in his study, but she said, "O, no, I can tell you about it here. Lately a thought comes to me incessantly. It does not matter where I am or what I am doing, this thought is ever present, 'O, how beautiful I am.'"

Brother Cox looked at her silently for a few seconds and then said, "Mrs. James, a mistake is no sin."

M. V. H.

Something to Think About.

Lillian was discoursing affably with the rich widower who was interested in her aunt.

"If I send you a doll," said he, "do you want it to have long golden curls like yours?"

She looked up at him and answered, "No, I wish the next doll I get would have hair like auntie's so I could take it off and put it on again." R. C.

Spreading the News.

It was the new curate's first sermon and he was most anxious to make a good impression.

As he was a rather vain young man he turned to the sexton and asked, "Could you get me a glass? A small one will do."

The sexton hurriedly departed and came back with something under his coat.

"I know what it is to be nervous," he said in a kindly tone. "I've brought you a whole bottle."

"But," gasped the curate, "I don't, I don't——"

"That's all right," said the sexton, "I'd never got it if I hadn't said it was for you." F. W.

SAYS THE AVERAGE MAN.

It seems to me, says the Average Man,
There's something wrong with the present plan;
Things don't go along the way they should
There's too much strife for the common good;
There's too much squabbling, too much row—
And it's gotta be stopped, some way, somehow . . .

It seems to me, says the Average Man,
They do settle strikes so it proves they can,
And they settle 'em all with a little talk
After we freeze or starve or walk . . .
If talk will settle it after the strike,
Then why not before, for the love of Mike?

It seems to me, says the Average Man,
There's too much drift, too little plan
To curb the greed of the haughty few
In labor, as well as capital, too . . .
Things may have come to a heluva pass
When a man can't wallop his own jackass.
But I for one am getting dam sick
Of being the jackass under the stick . . .
There's too much squabbling, too much row,
And it's gotta be stopped some way, somehow,
And a pretty good time to start is now.

The modern painless method of removing CORNS

Zino-pads—Dr. Scholl's new treatment—give immediate relief from pain while removing the cause

A famous foot specialist's new discovery. Stops hurting in one minute. Gets at the cause of corns!

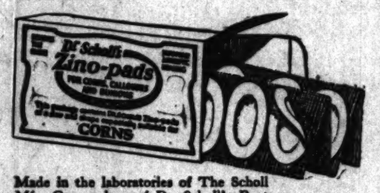
Corns are due to only one cause—friction-pressure. Yet many people continue to treat corns by paring with knives or burning with corrosive acids—dangerous methods that do not remove the cause.

Now Dr. Wm. M. Scholl, the eminent foot authority, has perfected Zino-pads—a wholly new treatment which relieves corns, bunions and callouses by removing the cause.

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads protect the sore spots from pressure and friction while they heal. Thin, antiseptic, waterproof, healing and absolutely safe, they will not injure the tenderest toe!

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads give quick and lasting relief. Nothing like them. No matter how unsuccessful you have been in treating corns and bunions and callouses in the past—try this new, painless method of correcting a condition by removing the cause.

Get a box of Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads today from your druggist or shoe dealer.



Made in the laboratories of The Scholl Mfg. Co., makers of Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort Appliances, Arch Supports, etc.

REBUILT
COLE AERO EIGHTS.
A BETTER BUY.

Since announcing a $250 reduction in price on all Rebuilt Cole Aero Eights, regardless of model or year, many Cole owners have been added to our ever increasing list, who heretofore thought they could not afford a car of this class.

The majority of these were under the impression that the Cole Aero Eights are too big and heavy and expensive to operate. They found, on investigation, that this is not the case. The standard seven passenger model weighs only 3,640 lbs., ready for the road.

Cole cars will run 14 to 15 miles on a gallon of gas, 500 miles on a quart of oil, and the new tires carry a 20,000 mile guarantee.

Can more be said? We welcome an opportunity to convince you.

These cars can be bought from $1,000 to $1,500, with prices ranging $1,000, $1,250, and $1,500, governed by the year and model.

And in addition we sell Cole Aero Eights with a MONEY BACK GUARANTEE that is the strongest indorsement ever offered for any car at any price, and we have yet to receive a request for refund.

Many have taken advantage of the announcement of our 1923 model, and as a consequence we have on hand a wide variety of previous models with more being traded in daily.

Make your selection now. See the car before it is rebuilt and determine its condition for yourself. In such cases where the car does not require rebuilding immediately we will sell it at less than cost and give you a contract for the rebuilding AT COST at any future date.

We have an attractive financing plan and terms can be arranged that will undoubtedly meet with your approval and that of your pocketbook.

5 Bargains
AT THE Peerless Motor Car Co.
OF ILLINOIS.

PEERLESS COUPE 1920. This late model Peerless 4 passenger enclosed car is one that we have just recently put through our Mechanical Department and refinished. Is a car that is in what we believe to be above the average in condition and from the general appearance it will be hard to distinguish it from new. The cord tires are in very good shape. Mechanically it runs smoothly and quietly. This is a rare bargain at our price of $1,850.

PEERLESS TOURING CAR, 1917. This is our standard 7 passenger touring car that we are offering as our special bargain for today. It is a car that has been owned and driven by the same man since the day it was delivered and shows the excellent care that it has always had. Owners of this class of automobiles are reluctant to part with them and we feel very fortunate in being able to offer this high grade Peerless at a ridiculously low price. We do not believe that you can duplicate this value anywhere, because it is not only fully equipped, but is in a condition to be remarkably fine condition. Do not let the price scare you, as it is one of these exceptional buys. Special for this sale, $975.

PEERLESS SEDAN, 1920. If you are contemplating the purchase of a high grade 7 passenger enclosed sedan, do not fail to take the time to inspect the automobile which is described in this ad. It is one that not only represents an exceptional saving as compared with the price of a new one today, but one that represents the appearance of new. It is refinished in Dark Blue and has much extra equipment, such as clock, motometer, bumper, Gabriel house shock absorbers, and many other extras. The cord tires show practically no wear. Has spare but a very few miles of very careful driving and it is one that is recommended by the Peerless Motor Car Co. of Illinois. Act quickly. Price, $1,350.

HAYNES, SEDAN, MODEL 47, 1921. This standard Haynes 7 passenger sedan is one that is above the average in condition. It is painted a dark blue and is equipped with an excellent set of cord tires, 2 extra, bumper, clock, and many other extras. Mechanically it is exceptionally fine. In order to avail yourself of a bargain in a late model Haynes sedan your immediate action will be necessary. We have taken into consideration the recent price reduction on the prices of new Haynes cars and have priced this car way below the market value to move it. Do not put off seeing and riding in it, if interested. Special for this sale, $1,350.

PEERLESS SPORT, 1919. This is our standard 4 passenger, 4 door Sport car and is in exceptionally very late 1919 model. In fact, it is a car that is above the average in every respect. The paint, which is a Dark Green, is in fair condition and it is completely equipped with many extras, such as motometer, nickeled headlamps, snubbers, and many other extras. The Cord tires show practically no wear. This particular automobile has class and distinction and is one that the Chicago branch of the Peerless Motor Car Company will recommend. To interested parties would suggest an inspection of this car immediately. We are making a very low the market value and it will undoubtedly be sold to the first person who sees it. Special for this sale, $650.
